Fraternal Insurance Organizations Must Not Use the War as an Excuse for Raising Their Official Salaries and Squandering Sacred Trust Funds in Waste and Needless Expenses.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, October 12, 1921.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, practically all of the old-line life insurance companies have not claimed the war as an excuse for in any way changing their prewar premiums, but there are some fraternal organizations which have used the war as an excuse for fraud on the policyholders. On that subject, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, if my colleagues will permit, to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the effect of the war on certain insurance policyholders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply grateful to my colleagues for this unanimous consent. The evil I shall discuss is a nation-wide one, and is now burdening thousands of poor farmers in the country and thousands of poor laboring men in towns and cities, 900,000 in all, living in many States of this Union, who are seeking redress.

Years ago the Knights of Honor represented that fraternal insurance economically administered could be furnished the poor man at a much less rate than that charged by old-line companies, it asserting that the latter wasted funds in large official salaries and needless overhead expenses. Poor men joined it and paid premiums for years, and after becoming old or infirm and not able to get insurance elsewhere, the Knights of Honor increased premium assessments to the extent that its policyholders were unable to pay, and they lost that sacred fund, upon which, through life, they had so confidently depended to keep the wolf from the door of their loved ones, when deprived through death of the family bread earner. No loving monument has been erected to the memory of the Knights of Honor. Disappointed fathers and husbands died cursing it.

About this time the Woodmen of the World, with headquarters at Omaha, Nebr., began to flourish. Its organizers denounced the officials who had wrecked the Knights of Honor as dishonest imposters. They distributed enticing literature leading the poor people of the country to believe that the Woodmen of the World was so organized that there would be no big official salaries paid, there would be no big overhead expenses, there would be no waste or extravagance, there would be no increase in assessments, but that all of its affairs would be economically administered, so that when a man reached mature years and could not then afford to take out new insurance he could confidently depend upon the integrity of his policy and also upon the integrity of the promise that to each holder of a $1,000 policy it would pay his family an additional $100 at death to provide a tombstone for his grave. Poor men believed the representations of these organizers and joined, some taking $1,000, others $2,000, and others $3,000, according to their financial ability. I was one of them. I was able only to take out the minimum. So on March 15, 1900, over 21 years ago, the Woodmen of the World issued me its certificate, No. 41421, for $1,000, agreeing to pay an additional $100 for a tombstone, the monthly premium rate I was to pay each month being stipulated at 60 cents in large, attractive writing at the top, of which 5 cents was designated as "emergency fund dues." I had just been married five months and had no children. I was a young man, poor but credulous, beginning life. J. C. Root was sovereign commander, Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD was sovereign banker, and J. T. Yates was sovereign clerk. I had confidence in them all. Like others, I did not read my policy. Like my poor neighbors, I relied upon the plausible representations of the eloquent organizers. We were informed that the organization paid Commander Root a salary of $7,500, Clerk Yates a salary of $3,000, and Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD a salary of $1,500 as banker, which, when compared with the salaries drawn by officials of old-line companies, did not seem unreasonable, although at that time a United States Senator received only $5,000, the governor of Texas only $4,000, and a circuit judge of Texas who tried men for their lives and cases involving millions of dollars received a salary of only $3,000.

CAUTIOUS TO PROTECT FAMILY.

But, Mr. Speaker, at the same time I cautiously took out another $1,000 policy in an old-line company, the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., issuing me its policy No. 499725 for $1,000 in March, 1900, with annual premium of $22.42, but agreeing to distribute its net profits each year in dividends to policyholders, to be deducted from premiums, thereby decreasing them. And it has decreased my premium each year since then. The armistice was signed November 11, 1918. When collecting my premium of $22.42 in March, 1919, this old-line company allowed me a dividend of $8.62, which when deducted left me only $13.80 to pay that year; and when collecting my premium in March, 1920, it allowed me a dividend of $9, which when deducted left me only $13.42 to pay that year; and when collecting this year's premium in March, 1921, it allowed me a dividend of $9.27, which when deducted left me only $13.15 to pay, being just a little more than $1 per month on the thousand, and this is 21 years after I took out my policy, and no matter how long I live it can not increase my premium one penny.

But all during these years, Mr. Speaker, I thought most of my Woodmen of the World insurance. I indorsed it; I recommended it; I preached it. I told poor men it was the best insurance for them, because I then believed it. And during the past 21 years in Texas few men there have made more Woodmen speeches than I have at gatherings, at Woodmen suppers, in the camps, at distant unveilings, made earnestly and gratuitously, always paying my own expenses. And I practiced what I preached, for as soon as I was able I took out an additional $2,000, making the maximum the Woodmen would issue to any man, for which I paid $2.70 monthly, making my monthly payment on the $3,000 total $3.30. And I have promptly paid each month during these 21 years my camp dues of 25 cents, and throughout the war I have unmurmuringly paid the special war-fund assessment of 10 cents each month, and not the slightest incident arose to shake my faith in the institution.

BAD NEWS FINALLY REACHED ME.

During the latter part of last year or the early part of this year I heard that in 1919 the officials of the Woodmen of the World had made changes in the constitution and by-laws, effective December 31, 1919, increasing the monthly premiums, attempting to place liens upon all policies, repudiating the $100 tombstone agreement, except upon certain new conditions, and otherwise changing the terms of its contract materially. And at the same time numerous citizens, farmers, and laborers in Texas began to write me, protesting against such action. And then I read my policies. And to my surprise I learned that if I had died within one year after insuring, only one-half of the policy would have been paid, and if I had died within two years only three-fourths would have been paid. And in the printed part I found this clause:

> This certificate is issued and accepted subject to all of the laws, rules, and regulations of this fraternity now in force or that may hereafter be enacted, and shall be null and void if said sovereign does not comply with all of said conditions and with all of the laws, rules, and regulations of the Sovereign Camp of the Woodmen of the World that are now in force or which may hereafter be enacted.

And then, Mr. Speaker, I perceived that the sovereign camp could change rates and assessments at will.

Hence, in order to learn the worst, I wrote to the present sovereign commander, W. A. Fraser, to learn exactly what they were attempting to do with my two policies.

CONCERNING THE $1,000 CERTIFICATE.

With regard to my $1,000 certificate, upon which for 21 years I had been paying the monthly assessment of 60 cents and which agreed to pay $100 additional for my tombstone, Commander Fraser wrote me as follows:

> Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
> ESTEEMED SOVEREIGN: I am in receipt of your favor of recent date, relative to the application of the laws of the society, at present effective, to your membership. The following detailed explanation will, I trust, aid you to a complete understanding of the matter.

Privilege No 1: You may, if you wish, continue to pay the 1917 rate as required for your age at entry into the society under the provisions of section 60(c) of the constitution and laws, which is $1.03. If you accept this privilege you will have a lien of $160 charged against your certificate to be deducted at your death, and you will relinquish and abandon the monument and disability benefits.

Privilege No. 2: You can continue to pay the same rate, $1.03 per month, and retain your monument benefit in addition to the death benefit and have a lien of $206 charged against your certificate.

Privilege No. 3: Provides for the retention of all the benefits stipulated in your old certificate; that is, the death, monument, and disability benefits. You can continue to pay your old rate of $1.03 per month and have a lien of $243 charged against your certificate.

Interest will be charged on the liens at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, provided it is paid monthly or annually. If you do not pay the interest, but allow it to accumulate and be charged against your certificate, the interest rate will be 5 per cent.

Privilege No. 4: If you wish to keep your certificate in full force and effect for the death and modified disability benefit without any monument benefit and not have a lien charged against your certificate, your rate will be $31.83 a year, or $2.76 a month. The term, "Modified disability benefit" means that upon becoming totally disabled at any time after attaining the age of 70 years, you can surrender your certificate and receive the full reserve accumulation thereon as a disability benefit.

Privilege No. 5: If you wish to keep your certificate in full force and effect for all the benefits stipulated therein, viz, the death, monument, and disability benefits, and not have a lien charged against it, your rate will be $37.16 annually, or $3.22 monthly.

Privilege No. 6: If you wish to exchange your certificate for the security double indemnity certificate, your rate will be $38.41 annually, or $3.30 monthly. No lien being charged against your certificate.

Members who elect to take advantage of privileges Nos. 4 and 6 must forward their old certificates to this office, together with the application card. Those members who rerate on privilege No. 4 will receive in exchange a universal certificate, and those who rerate on privilege No. 6 will receive in exchange a security double indemnity certificate. Leaflet inclosed gives particulars regarding the different certificates referred to above.

Truly and fraternally, yours,

W. A. FRASER,
Sovereign Commander.

You will note that he states that my regular rate is $1.03, when as a matter of fact it is only 60 cents, being assessment rate of 55 cents, and 5 cents "emergency fund dues," making 60 cents monthly.

CONCERNING THE $2,000 CERTIFICATE.

With regard to my $2,000 certificate. Sovereign Fraser replied to my letter as follows:

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Washington, D. C.

ESTEEMED SOVEREIGN: I am in receipt of your favor of recent date, relative to the application of the laws of the society, at present effective, to your membership. The following detailed explanation will, I trust, aid you to a complete understanding of the matter.

Privilege No. 1. You may, if you wish, continue to pay the 1917 rate as required for your age at entry into the society under the provisions of section 60 (c) of the constitution and laws, which is $2.75. If you accept this privilege you will have a lien of $320 charged against your certificate to be deducted at your death, and you will relinquish and abandon the monument and disability benefits.

Privilege No. 2. You can continue to pay the same rate, $2.75 per month, and retain your monument benefit in addition to the death benefit and have a lien of $366 charged against your certificate.

Privilege No. 3. Provides for the retention of all the benefits stipulated in your old certificate; that is, the death, monument, and disability benefits. You can continue to pay your old rate of $2.75 per month and have a lien of $440 charged against your certificate.

Interest will be charged on the liens at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, provided it is paid monthly or annually. If you do not pay the interest, but allow it to accumulate and be charged against your certificate, the interest rate will be 5 per cent.

Privilege No. 4. If you wish to keep your certificate in full force and effect for the death and modified disability benefit without any monument benefit and not have a lien charged against your certificate, your rate will be $65.72 a year or $5.70 a month. The term "Modified disability benefit" means that upon becoming totally disabled at any time after attaining the age of 70 years, you can surrender your certificate and receive the full reserve accumulation thereon as a disability benefit.

Privilege No. 5. If you wish to keep your certificate in full force and effect for all the benefits stipulated therein, viz., the death, monument, and disability benefits, and not have a lien charged against it, your rate will be $72.81 annually or $6.31 monthly.

Privilege No. 6. If you wish to exchange your certificate for the security double indemnity certificate, your rate will be $76.82 annually or $6.60 monthly, no lien being charged against your certificate.

Members who elect to take advantage of privileges Nos. 4 and 6 must forward their old certificates to this office, together with the application card. Those members who rerate on privilege No. 4 will receive in exchange a universal certificate, and those who rerate on privilege No. 6 will receive in exchange a security double indemnity certificate. Leaflet inclosed gives particulars regarding the different certificates referred to above.

Truly and fraternally yours,

W. A. FRASER,
Sovereign Commander.

COMPLAINTS POUR FROM EVERY DIRECTION.

And then, Mr. Speaker, complaints poured from every direction. They came from poor men who for a lifetime have paid their monthly premiums to this organization. They protested against it placing any lien upon their policies, and against it charging them interest thereon, cumulating all the time, when they owed nothing. And they protested against having their monthly assessments raised, and against the attempted repudiation of their $100 tombstone provision. And so I began to investigate. And the sovereign camp learned of it.

And from its office in Omaha, Nebr., Commander Fraser recently sent me a printed letter, with printed date of January 15, 1921, on same, from which let me quote the following portion:

All members holding certificates under options 1, 2, or 3 will receive a credit upon the liens or other indebtedness standing against their certificates covering their proportionate amount of the refund, thus reducing the amount of the lien or other indebtedness.

You being in the latter class, this credit, amounting to one monthly installment, will be given you, and at the date of the maturity of your claim the lien will be reduced by not only this credit but, we hope, many other refunds that will be declared in the near future.

There will not be any change in the interest due on your lien on account of the enormous amount of work this would entail, both in local camps and the sovereign camp, but full credit will be given at maturity of claim.

Should you desire to eliminate the lien charge, you can do so by furnishing an acceptable health certificate and paying the rate at your attained or present age, in accordance with the provisions under options 4, 5, or 6. About 400,000 members have made this change.

Our society will continue to do business on an actual cost basis, which, in my judgment, is the safest and most equitable plan that could possibly be adopted. The cost of managing our society is only 72 cents per member per annum.

ATTACHING LIENS AND CHARGING INTEREST NOT CONTEMPLATED BY CONTRACT.

No policyholders 21 years ago contemplated that their monthly assessments would be raised, or that liens would be attached to their policies, and cumulative interest charged thereon.

Commander Fraser asserts above that he will continue to do business "on an actual-cost basis." Actual-cost basis is attractive only when the goods are worth the cost. If an overcoat cost the owner $100, you would not buy it from him at cost if it were worth only $50.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have investigated Sovereign Commander Fraser's idea of "actual-cost basis." He says the cost of managing is only 72 cents per member each year. It all depends on how many members. The little pamphlet lately published by Commander Fraser admits that there are about 900,000 members, which, at 72 cents each, totals the enormous sum of $648,000 he wastes each year on "managing" expenses. That of itself is a lot of money. Where does it all go? But from 1909 to 1918 the "managing" cost was 76.3 per cent per member. I will show you where a part of it goes. Responding to my request for same, on October 7, 1921, Sovereign Clerk Yates sent me the following data showing all raises in salaries of the three principal officers since 1900, to wit:

Salaries paid by Sovereign Camp, Woodmen of the World, to its sovereign commander, sovereign clerk, and sovereign banker since 1900.

For year—	To sovereign commander.	To sovereign clerk.	To sovereign banker.
1900	$7,500	$3,600	$1,500
1901	7,500	3,600	1,500
1902	7,500	3,600	1,500
1903	8,000	6,000	2,400
1904	8,000	6,000	2,400
1905	8,000	6,000	2,400
1906	8,000	6,000	2,400
1907	10,000	7,500	3,600
1908	10,000	7,500	3,600
1909	10,000	7,500	3,600
1910	10,000	7,500	3,600
1911	10,000	7,500	3,600
1912	12,500	10,000	3,600
1913	12,500	10,000	3,600
1914	12,500	10,000	3,600
1915	12,500	10,000	3,600
1916	12,500	10,000	3,600
1917	12,500	10,000	3,600
1918	12,500	10,000	3,600
1919	12,500	10,000	3,600
1920	25,000	15,000	6,000
1921	25,000	15,000	6,000
Total 21 years	254,500	182,300	72,900

Thus, Mr. Speaker, during the 21 years I have been paying assessments and dues each month to the Woodmen of the World it has paid its sovereign commander $254,500 in salary, besides the mileage and per diem such official has drawn, and during this 21 years Sovereign Clerk John T. Yates has drawn the enormous sum of $182,300 in salary, besides his mileage and per diem he has from time to time been allowed and besides the salary he drew between 1891, when he became clerk, to the year 1900; and during these 21 years Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD, as sovereign banker, has drawn $72,900 salary, besides certain mileage and per diem usually allowed when traveling.

And when Sovereign Commander Fraser changed the laws of this organization, to take effect December 31, 1919, which while raising assessments, placing interest-bearing liens upon policies, and repudiating contractual tombstone benefits due members, at the same time raised his salary from $12,500 to $25,000 per year and raised the salary of Clerk Yates, who was drawing $3,600 when I joined in 1900, to $15,000 per year, he need not think that the members of the Woodmen of the World are going to be lulled to sleep by his "actual cost basis" song. They are not going to stand for it. They are going to make him dig up and readjust things.

Mr. Speaker, there is no abler man in the United States Senate than Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD. He is a man of strict honor and integrity. His heart beats for the common masses. I believe that pressure of his senatorial duties has caused him to overlook what Commander Fraser and Clerk Yates are doing with this sacred fund of poor people. It means the protection of widows and little children after their bread earner is buried. No clerical officer in the world is worth $15,000 per year. The governor of Texas still gets $4,000 only. Nine other governors of States get only $4,000. For eight years I served on the circuit trial bench of my State for $3,000.

The State banking and insurance commissioner of Texas, who audits all banking institutions and insurance companies, is paid only $5,500 per year. The comptroller of Texas, who handles millions of dollars, is paid only $2,500 per year. The attorney general of Texas is paid only $4,000 per year. The secretary of state is paid only $2,000 per year in Texas. The chief justice of the Supreme Court of Texas is paid only $6,500 per year. Our present Cabinet members, including the present Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the distinguished Charles Evans Hughes, Secretary of State of the United States, all draw only $12,000 each per year. The distinguished William Howard Taft, once President of the United States and now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, the greatest tribunal on earth, is now paid $15,000 per year. Yet Commander Fraser has seen fit to pay Clerk John T. Yates $15,000 per year, equaling the Chief Justice's salary, and has paid himself $25,000 per year, or $10,000 more than is paid the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. And he did all this in 1919. Now, what was the condition of the order in 1919? Did it justify it? Oh, no!

ADMITTEDLY 62 PER CENT INSOLVENT IN 1919.

In the communication which Hon. A. W. Briscoe, commissioner of insurance for the State of Alabama, wrote to the Sovereign Camp, and which Sovereign Commander Fraser admits to be true by reproducing it in his pamphlet that he is now distributing as an excuse for raising rates, Commissioner Briscoe states:

GENTLEMEN: I am in receipt of rate book, explaining the constitution and by-laws of the Woodmen of the World, as amended and adopted at the thirteenth biennial session in Chicago, July, 1919.

* * * As I understand it, the actuaries, after careful investigation, discovered that the order was 62 per cent insolvent. The laws of no State in the Union will permit any insurance carrier, whether it be a fraternal order, company, or association, to continue operations when it is insolvent. There was, therefore, nothing left for this order to do except to either readjust its rates or else suspend business.

I submit in all earnestness, Mr. Speaker, when a fraternal insurance order was admittedly 62 per cent insolvent on December 31, 1919, it was no time to raise the salary of the sovereign commander from $12,500 to $25,000 per year and to raise the salary of the sovereign clerk from $10,000 to $15,000 per year, and the salary of the sovereign banker from $3,600 to $6,000, especially when to do it it was necessary to increase the burdens upon each and every one of the 900,000 trusting members of the order.

It seems that two men, one from Missouri and one from Oklahoma, dared to question some of the acts of Sovereign Fraser in court. I know nothing of the nature or merit of their contentions. Probably the only question raised before the court was the right of the order to raise its assessments. Naturally the court ruled that it had such right. I have already called attention to this right it reserved in its certificates, knowledge of which few of the 900,000 members had brought home to them until their assessments were raised. But I feel reasonably sure that the question of Sovereign Commander Fraser's right to wreck this order in large salary drawing has not been properly raised in any court, hence is not decided.

The Sovereign Camp met in New York City in 1921. Its home is in Omaha, Nebr. Mileage and per diem expenses were paid to 132 delegates from their homes to New York City and return. If this order was 62 per cent bankrupt in 1919, which is admitted, then why did not Sovereign Fraser arrange for this session to be held at a point more centrally located and thus save enormous expense?

The first action taken by Sovereign Fraser at this New York meeting was to denounce the Missouri and Oklahoma men as insurgents, because they had not agreed with him, and he then told the following sacrilegious joke:

It does not matter what the administration might attempt to do, it is misconstrued and criticised by these insurgents. They remind me of the same delegation which was taken on a sightseeing trip through heaven by St. Peter. After St. Peter had worked hard showing them through the celestial city, he turned to the leader of the delegation and cheerfully asked the question, "Well, how do you like it?" "It won't do at all," crabbed the leader. "What's wrong?" asked St. Peter. "It's all wrong," said the chairman. "The women need more clothes; the men are ridiculous in robes; the golden pavement is a criminal waste of money; the pearly gates are a sinful extravagance; the harp music is out of place; there is too much rustling of wings and flying about; the price of admission is entirely too high; and there is too much harmony among the occupants; we have been accustomed to raising hell all of our lives while on earth. The wearing of halos is an affectation; the throne is entirely too ornate, and the presiding officer is invested with altogether too much power." "Anything else wrong?" asked St. Peter. "Yes; I don't like the way you wear your whiskers." "But," said St. Peter, "who are you to criticise heaven and everything connected with it in this manner?" "I am the president of the Home Wreckers' League," replied the chairman. "Ah!" exclaimed St. Peter, "I felt sure I had made a mistake in permitting you and your crowd to enter here. Michael (calling an assistant), please show the home wreckers the coal chute, and hurry."

We have no coal chute; neither have we laws upon our statute books that enable us to promptly handle men in our society whose sole purpose seems to be its destruction.

After which, very naturally, the two erstwhile beloved fraternal "choppers" were immediately expelled from the order, there being no "coal chute" to dump them down, and thus they will be able to cause no more trouble.

A MOST DAMNABLE ACT.

But the worst of it all, Mr. Speaker, was the action Sovereign Commander Fraser permitted to be taken, providing that there should be no sovereign camp session held until 1925, thereby extending his term of office until 1925, and preventing the 900,000 members of this great order from having a chance to be heard until 1925. From page 8 of the recent Fraternal Monitor I copy the following:

No election was held at this session. The officers were chosen two years ago for four-year terms. One of the significant acts of the delegates this year, showing their approval of the administration, was to fix the year 1925 as the date of the next sovereign camp session, thereby extending the present terms of office to that time.

Does Sovereign Commander Fraser think that he can thus close the mouths of 900,000 loyal Woodmen of the World for four long years, and thus permit him to remain in office doing as he pleases with their funds until 1925? If he does, he has another guess coming. He thinks that between now and 1925 he will draw another $100,000 in salary, at $25,000 a year, and that Clerk Yates will draw another $60,000 in salary, at $15,000 per year, and that they will have their nests feathered by that time. But he has another guess coming.

I hope that all of the camps in my home State of Texas will take a vote on whether they are willing for these salaries to be drawn until 1925 without an intervening session of the sovereign camp, and if they are not, notify me, and unless Sovereign Commander Fraser does not himself do it voluntarily I will take steps to bring upon him the necessity of calling a session next year, when the 900,000 common sovereigns of the order may express their opinion. I know that I can depend on Senator SHEPPARD to help me. And if Sovereign Fraser wants to do the right thing, he and Clerk Yates will pay back into the treasury of this order some of these enormous sums they have drawn out as salaries. Sovereign Fraser, I am after you, and you can not dump me down a coal chute. And I am not only after you, but I am going to get you, unless you do the right thing by the 900,000 members of this great fraternal order I have loved and loyally served for 21 years. Of course, if a majority of the members are satisfied, I have nothing more to say. But are they satisfied?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 14, 1921.

On the bill (H. R. 7882) for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress amongst the several States under the Fourteenth Census.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill provides for a reapportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Fourteenth Census, fixing 460 as the proposed number of Members. At present the House of Representatives consists of 435 Members, of which 6 are assigned to West Virginia. If the measure before us shall pass, the representation from my State will not be changed. I am opposed to the bill and will vote against it for these reasons:

(1) There are already too many Members. Even a less number could do the work. On account of the large number of Members one has difficulty in obtaining the floor to present his views upon matters that vitally affect his constituents.

(2) The Republican Party is pledged to practice economy, thereby to relieve, so far as may be possible, the taxpayers who are staggering and groaning under a great burden of taxation due to the willful extravagance and wanton waste of the past eight years of Democratic rule. The salaries, mileage, stationery, secretarial help, and telegraph, telephone, and postal franks, together with office space and office equipment of the proposed 25 new Members would add an extra expense of Government approximating $500,000 annually.

(3) The bill would increase the membership of certain southern States as follows: Arkansas, from 7 to 8; Georgia, from 12 to 13; North Carolina, from 10 to 11; Texas, from 20 to 22; and so forth. So that we see that the gentlemen who framed this bill, instead of reducing southern representation actually propose to increase the same.

Section 2, article 14, of the Constitution, requires that in a State where the right to vote at an election is denied to a citizen, or such right is in any way abridged, the basis of representation for that State shall be reduced.

The words of the Constitution are plain, the intention of those who framed it clear and explicit. The terms are mandatory in character, telling Congress that it shall reduce representation whenever and wherever disenfranchisement exists.

As an evidence of such disenfranchisement, I direct your attention to the following cases which are merely illustrative of other like cases in the South, where the Constitution is palpably violated by excluding the Negro from participation in elections.

At the last election—November, 1920—there were cast in the fifth West Virginia district, which I have the honor to represent, 85,587 votes. At the same election there were cast in the entire State of South Carolina, electing seven Congressmen, only 67,737 votes. At the same election there were cast in the entire State of Mississippi, electing eight Congressmen, only 70,657 votes. It appears, therefore, that whereas 85,587 voters in the fifth West Virginia district have only one Congressman, a less number of voters in South Carolina have seven Congressmen, and a less number in Mississippi have eight Congressmen.

The "grandfather," or "explain-the-Constitution" clauses of the State constitutions in the South do the work.

The registrar tests the man or woman who applies to be registered in about this fashion. If the applicant be a Democrat the question propounded will be "Name the highest officer of the Government." The answer is obvious, and the applicant's name is placed on the list of voters. If the applicant be a Republican, especially a colored man, he will be asked to explain what is meant by an ex post facto law, referred to in the Constitution. None but a lawyer or person having some knowledge of legal terms would be able to give an intelligent answer to the question. The result is discrimination and disenfranchisement.

Mr. Speaker, for the reasons I have assigned, I am compelled to vote against this bill.

Trade With China.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEONIDAS C. DYER,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 24, 1921.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks, I include the following:

REMARKS OF HON. SAO KE ALFRED SZE, CHINESE MINISTER TO THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, BEFORE FOREIGN TRADE BUREAU ST. LOUIS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, ST. LOUIS, MO., EVENING OCTOBER 21, 1921.

As a citizen of the Republic of China, I feel peculiarly at home in St. Louis because of the constructive interest which the business men and citizens of your city have taken in my country. In saying this I have especially in mind the efforts of the official representatives of St. Louis and Missouri in the Congress of the United States in bringing about closer business relations between America and China. The Hon. L. C. DYER, of St. Louis, through his untiring efforts to obtain the enactment of the China trade act, has made your city and business interests known all over my country. As the official representative of the Republic of China in your national Capital I sincerely hope that his efforts to bring about closer business relations between China and the United States will be crowned with success. And Mr. DYER is not the only prominent citizen of Missouri who has shown an interest in the well-being of my country. The Hon. JAMES A. REED has forever endeared himself to my countrymen for his championship of my country when the Shantung case was before the United States Senate. Senator REED'S address on the Shantung decision of the Paris peace conference, delivered in the Senate on October 14, 1919, will always stand as a shining example of America's interest in helping China to preserve her national existence. And the work of Congressman DYER and Senator REED is not all. Senator SPENCER also championed our cause in the United States Senate, and in addition he has shown his interest in my country in still another field of activity. He has loaned us his son, who has been a professor in one of our universities for several years. Thus you can see that every Chinese has a warm spot in his heart for St. Louis. We sincerely hope that the time may come when we may repay you for your interest in our country.

And I believe that time is not far distant, for I am informed that St. Louis is engaged upon a great project to develop the Mississippi River so that ocean ships may dock at your harbor and take your products through the Panama Canal directly to the great seaports of my country. In many respects St. Louis bears a close resemblance to our great interior industrial city of Hankow. St. Louis is connected with the sea by the great Mississippi River and our city of Hankow is connected with the ocean by our great Yangtsze River. We are ahead of you in the development of river transportation, for large ocean-going cargo ships already traverse our river and deliver their cargoes more than 800 miles inland. If we continue our efforts, certainly the day is not far distant when ocean ships may take on cargoes at St. Louis and deliver them directly at Hankow and returning can deliver our raw products directly to your factories here on the banks of the Mississippi River.

Let us hope for the time when we may devote our treasure to the development of these constructive works of peace rather than our present practice of devoting so much of our money to engines of destruction. I have especially in mind the present effort of President Harding to bring about better conditions in the world through the calling of the Conference on Limitation of Armament and Pacific and Far Eastern Problems. China is entering this conference whole-heartedly with complete good faith in the altruism of America in seeking to eliminate through peaceful discussion some of the troublesome questions that are likely to lead to misunderstandings that may again throw the world into the gloom of an armed conflict. China is entering this conference with but one desire and that is the desire to preserve our national existence and the right to pursue our happiness in full fellowship with the other nations of the world.

A few days ago there was held in Washington a conference of industrial and labor leaders from all parts of the United States to discuss the problem of unemployment. I hear that there are at the present time several millions of men out of work in the United States. The chief cause of great numbers of men in America being without employment is the industrial depression which has followed the disastrous European war. Now, that is a subject that touches my heart for we have just gone through a famine that impoverished millions of my countrymen and had it not been for assistance rendered by the American people, thousands of my countrymen would have perished. Through this depression you have lost one of your great markets for your products that formerly existed in the various countries of Europe. I am wondering whether China can not come to your rescue and help you out of your industrial depression. China is now at the beginning of a great industrial development and if we can work together we can both benefit. I just read in the newspapers where the Chinese Government has placed a contract with a concern in Philadelphia for the construction of a new Government mint in Shanghai. This contract, I am told, will keep the workshops of this firm fully occupied for at least seven months. I also know of a large order for railroad freight cars that has just been completed by your American Car & Foundry Co. here in St. Louis.

In addition to this, we have just placed an order here in America for locomotives to the amount of nearly $3,000,000. In the reports of your Department of Commerce at Washington, I learn that between January 1 and August 31 China purchased in the United States 201,000 bales of cotton. That is a business that should mean much to the country around St. Louis. We are buying your raw cotton, your cotton goods, your machinery, your mineral-oil products, your tobacco and your kerosene, and your lumber in ever-increasing quantities. China's foreign trade has nearly doubled since 1910, and we want to see America in a position to take her just share of it, the share that your territorial location and your industrial supremacy entitle you to.

Here in the United States in talking to business men I hear a great deal about the importance of good will in the development of trade. If good will is an important element in the development of domestic trade, why is it not also an important element in the development of international trade. Out in my country, on the other side of the Pacific, you have gained an important asset of good will. I don't mind telling you that the word "American" carries much weight with the people of China. You have for many years devoted millions of your treasure and untold personal effort in the education of the young men and women of China. In Shanghai there is a college—the Shanghai Baptist College—that was almost entirely financed by the citizens of Missouri. In addition to these efforts, your Government, through the return of the American surplus of the Boxer indemnity, has enabled my Government to expend that money in the education of our young men and women in the universities and colleges of the United States. There are four graduates of your School of Journalism at the University of Missouri—two of of them Americans and two of them Chinese—who are editing newspapers in China to-day. It is these things that have built up for your countrymen a great asset of good will among my countrymen, and the good will of 400,000,000 people is something to be proud of in these days of national jealousies and hatreds following the disastrous World War.

Now, I want to say a few words about the coming conference on limitation of armament which is to be held in Washington next month. Secretary of State Hughes has stated that the American policy toward China is based upon the open door of equal opportunity. This policy toward China was announced nearly a quarter of a century ago by another illustrious Secretary of State, Mr. John Hay. The open-door policy has been likened to your Monroe doctrine, which means that the Republics of the American continent have the right to self-development without outside interference. If this is what the open door really means, then that is a principle that China and America both believe in. In fighting for the open door of equal opportunity, we are fighting for the same principles, and when we speak of the open door we speak the same language. We want the right to self-development, and that is what you want us to have. In our every-day business affairs we are likely to overlook the fact that diplomacy may have an interest to us in our everyday business development; that diplomacy may have a very intimate relationship to the daily operation of our factories and the maintenance of a large staff of well paid and contented employees. Since the beginning of our relationship with western nations we have been hampered in our development. Our rich, undeveloped resources have caused aggressive nations to cast covetous eyes upon our territory. America has always refrained from aggressions upon our territory and attempts to obtain a political economic dominance in our internal affairs. Now you are trying to teach the rest of the world that the American policy is best, not only in the preservation of world peace but in the commercial and industrial relations of the various nations. In brief, America has learned that it actually pays to treat other nations as brothers and equals, and we are sure that the example of America is ultimately to become the guiding principle in the relations of nations. If the various nations about the Pacific can be induced to follow the good example of the United States in its relations with Canada, with Cuba, the Philippines, and with the Republics of Central and South America, there will be no further need for conferences on disarmament, and we can then cease building battleships and devote our money to the development of our resources and undeveloped regions. Then there will be sufficient trade and sufficient room for all of us to live together in peace and mutual good will.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ,
OF WEST VIRGINIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 24, 1921.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following:

ADDRESS OF WELLS GOODYKOONTZ, MEMBER OF CONGRESS, BEFORE THE CLARKSBURG CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, AT CLARKSBURG, W. VA., MONDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1921.

It is in relation to the problem of relieving a stressful situation occasioned by the inability of certain of our wage earners to earn a livelihood at gainful employment—which I understand is of immediate concern, and the principal object in view—that this meeting of men prominent in the professional, financial, industrial, and civic life of the city has been called.

I am informed that it was your thought that, as a legislative officer of the Government, I might be able to make some suggestion calculated to aid or assist you in solving the problem, and hence the reason why I am here to-day. It was the hope that I might in some degree be helpful to you and those of our fellow citizens less fortunate than ourselves that prompted me to accept your generous and highly appreciated invitation.

The city of Clarksburg, the birthplace and home of noted men of the present as also of the past, is an object of interest and admiration, not alone to the rest of the State but to those ouside as well.

As early as July 27, this year, I prepared and introduced in Congress a measure directing attention to the matter of unemployment. The facts upon which the measure was predicated were:

That due to the reaction of industrial activities, resulting as an aftermath of the war, there existed a nation-wide stagnation in business;

That as a result thereof there were hundreds of thousands of laboring men—miners, railroad, steel, glass, and other workers—out of employment with families dependent upon them for support;

That it was obligatory upon the Government in the interest of these workingmen and of the whole people to take care that speedy relief be afforded;

That it was to the interest of the country to provide a system of national highways useful in times of peace as in time of war;

That the time was opportune for the Government to engage in a great work of the character mentioned in order to provide employment for those who were unable to find work and to afford good roads for farmers, thereby enabling the latter to deliver agricultural products direct to the consumer and to result in reducing the cost of living.

The object of the resolution was to direct public attention to the condition of unemployment and the need of Federal aid in road building.

Concerning the subject before us I direct your attention to the fact that before the war America was in debt to foreign peoples $3,000,000,000, now foreign peoples and nations owe us $13,000,000,000. Before and during the war America enjoyed a great export trade. That export trade has fallen off and is now limited, principally to the things that America can supply; that are not to be found elsewhere, such as wheat, corn, and cotton—commodities that are fundamentally essential to the very existence of the peoples of the world.

As indicative of the very great necessity of obtaining food and raiment from America, witness the constant stream of gold flowing to our shores from every land and clime. From India and Australia, China and Japan, England and France, Italy and Germany come boxes of bar gold and bags of gold coin. We now possess 43 per cent of the known gold supply of the world, and gold is still coming in. The presence of this great volume of the yellow treasure in this country constitutes not only a barrier to trade but, in my judgment, a menace to national safety. The gold reserve of continental Europe is being depleted; paper money becoming valueless, and a cataclysm, due to the depreciation and almost worthlessness of the mark in Germany, is now rapidly approaching. In the present circumstances what should be done?

My opinion, along with that of others, in view of the fact that Europe's capital is gone—largely destroyed by the war—is that Americans must find some way to assist in financing industry in European countries, and in that way help to place these peoples on their feet again, so that they will continue to be able to buy what we have to sell, namely, the products of our mines, fields, and factories. If this is not done we shall have to pay an awful price for this dereliction of duty. When we shall have drained the last gold from their treasuries, then our export trade will have ceased to exist. The ships at our merchant marine, which cost us over $3,000,000,000, will be idle. In fact, 50 per cent of them are now already tied up, and unemployment will be found in far greater proportion than that which is now giving us such grave concern.

It is to be hoped that Congress will at an early day pass the measure designed to empower the Secretary of the Treasury to fund the floating debt of foreign nations due as advancements made during the war.

It is to be hoped that the Senate, without further delay, will act favorably upon the bill passed by the House authorizing a loan for 10 years of $500,000,000 at 6 per cent interest to the railroads in order that the latter may pay for supplies and put their men to work repairing their roadbeds and bad-order cars, of which there are 30 per cent when the normal proportion is only 5 per cent.

It is to be hoped that the Senate will soon ratify the German peace treaty and thereby allow our trade with that country to go on without British and French intervention. It is to be hoped that the Senate will soon pass the tariff bill and pay less attention to metropolitan dailies speaking for their great advertisers, the big department stores, now buying cheap and selling high, brazenly profiteering without the slightest compunction.

It is to be hoped that the Senate will, amid the dinning noise and the dimming smoke of their verbosity, find time to stop their investigations and pass a bill revising the taxing laws in accordance with our promises to the American people, made not only on the stump but in the party platforms.

Importers and manufacturers will be at sea until the tariff laws are settled. Business men can not afford to make sale of a property until they know how much of the profit is to be exacted by the taxing hand of the Government. If the Senate can be induced to act, business in a very marked degree will recover.

In my opinion, the time is now opportune for internal improvement and development. There is not now, and will not be for some time to come, a great demand from abroad for any commodity that foreigners themselves can produce. We must, therefore, find something for our people to do.

There is a vast shortage of houses due to a suspension of building during the war, and there are a large number of Federal buildings necessary to be erected for post office and court purposes; especially is this true of the large cities, as, for example, New York and Chicago, where the Government is paying almost fabulous sums for rent. Public buildings authorized and appropriated for before Mr. Wilson came into office have never been built—for instance, the one for Williamson, my home town; and we believe that a Federal courthouse at Williamson would be of distinct advantage to the good people of that community.

There is also pressing need for a new Federal building in your own progressive and beautiful city of Clarksburg.

Public-road construction is just in its infancy. Under our present system the Federal Government pays one half of the cost, the State the other half. Before the recess the House passed a bill appropriating $100,000,000 for good roads. The Senate reduced the appropriation and a conference committee must try and compromise the differences.

The Congress initiated the scheme of Federal aid to the States in the building of public highways. The work has made rapid progress, but must be carried further and continued indefinitely. Federal appropriations should be greatly increased. A system of splendid highways will add untold millions to the value of property—doubling and quadrupling the value of farm lands—rendering of easy access farms that are now inaccessible and giving the farmer quick and easy means of marketing his products, and thereby furnish to the village and the city dwellers the necessary supply of fresh eggs, fruits, vegetables, and other commodities necessary to their existence and comfort. The development of the motor car has made the building of permanent high-grade roads an immediate and urgent necessity.

Good roads will not only add millions to the national wealth but bring comfort to all, especially to the rural people, enabling the latter, by means of quick transportation, to enjoy in large measure the advantages of urban life and the village or city dweller the advantage of pleasant journeys through the beautiful country.

The Government for half a century has been spending money lavishly in improving river navigation, deepening the harbors of the port cities, aiding the great railway systems of the West, building immense dams for the benefit of the arid lands of the western country, but has done comparatively little for the great farming classes in general.

These roads when built will also be of use as post roads and of high military value, will tend to relieve railway congestion, and prove of great and lasting benefit to all the people.

For the delay in passing necessary legislation do not blame the Representatives especially your brilliant and gifted orator, Hon. STUART F. REED, of whom you may well feel justly proud; do not blame your President, whose bright mind, clear vision, and courageous heart are constantly on his work; do not blame even your own distinguished Senators; blame the Senators from west of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio, the so-called "agricultural bloc."

In certain important sections of the country where a particular industry predominates there will be found cohesion of the Members in Congress to protect that industry, regardless of the effect thereof on the rest of the country and oblivious to the fact that the prosperity of the particular industry is dependent upon a prosperity general to all lines of industry. The business of this country is so articulated and interdependent as that one branch of it may not succeed unless the country generally is enjoying good business. The proposition I have stated is demonstrated by the list of stock sold on the city exchanges, which is our best business barometer.

The quotations show that a market factor that effects one security usually affects the other—the value of grain and coal, copper and steel, oil and lumber rise and fall pretty much together. In general business acts as a unit. It is either good or bad or indifferent. The coal operator, the oil producer, the farmer, the carrier, and likewise their employees, are in the same boat. This being true, how futile and how selfish it would seem for a group of legislators from the great agricultural States west of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio to band themselves together for the purpose of exempting their constituents from the payment of Federal taxes on account of the war debt and to lay these burdens upon the shoulders of others—collective individuals, holding shares of a joint stock company, that for mere convenience are employed to perform a necessary function in the business affairs of the people.

Men in Congress who seek to shift the tax burden from one section to another section of the country may not be unpatriotic; in fact, may believe they are truly loyal to their constituents and faithful to their oath of office, but they are none the less fundamentally wrong in their conception of the legislative obligation they owe to the entire people.

The war cry of one of our great historic political parties for more than a century has been "Equal rights to all, special privileges to none," yet certain of the Representatives of this great party have joined hands with certain members of another great political party and formed a new contingent or organization to which I have already referred, namely, the "agricultural bloc."

Having sprung from the soil, I have a real, genuine, never-to-be-forgotten appreciation of the hardships and struggles of the farmer and the farmer's wife.

At Washington it is not unusual for the backers of a vicious measure to speak of it as a soldiers' bill or a farmers' bill. There comes to mind the Granger Party, the People's Party, the Nonpartisan League, and the Farmer-Labor Party, the backers of all of which were or are mere politicians seeking office. We have at least a dozen farmers' organizations represented at Washington, the officers of some of which draw large salaries at the expense of the farmers.

The agents of some of these organizations—for example, the Grangers—are men of the very highest type, but as to certain others, we find them supporting measures in aid of the packers, or affiliated with those who want to nationalize the railroads or the coal mines, or openly or secretly are backing the pork-barrel scheme to get $100,000,000 for Muscle Shoals.

The farmers should establish one great organization, officered by men of the very highest ability. Such an organization would be helpful to the farmers and the country alike. For example, its officers would be frank enough to say to the farmers that the scheme to lay the tax burdens upon the corporations would not help the farmer, first, because the farmer can not prosper unless the corporations are prospering, and that it is to the disadvantage of the farmer to dislocate business or to oppress any class engaged in it; and, secondly, the officers of such a farm organization would show to the farmer how the latter must himself help to pay the corporation taxes, and the greater the tax upon the corporation the greater the farmer's burden.

For is it not true that taxes are an element of expense that must be added to cost, and in the final analysis be borne by the consumer? This is the day of corporate enterprise; individual proprietorship in great measure is gone.

The farmer's plow and disk harrow are made by a corporation; the fertilizer and the drill are produced by a corporation; the reaper and the thrasher are made by a corporation; the wagon, the cultivator, and all other implements that he uses are manufactured and sold by a corporation. The railroads, the elevator, the mill that grinds, the wholesaler, the jobbers, and frequently the retailer that handle his products are corporate establishments.

Furthermore, the lumber and hardware and cement that go into his residence and barn and fences are all manufactured and sold by corporations; the cotton and woolen goods, boots and shoes, fuel, gears, chemicals and drugs, coffee and sugar, stoves, pots and pans—practically everything that the farmer buys—is made, handled, and sold by the corporation.

There can be no justification for heavy corporate taxes, for such tend to disorganize trade and commerce and to retard an orderly readjustment. What the country needs is for the business machine—not unlike the mechanism of a great printing press—to move in harmony and as a unit, without attempting to require any part of the machinery to do more than its assigned duty. To act otherwise must result in breaking down the machine and delaying the resumption of business.

A reduction in freight, passenger, and express rates, and of the cost of certain classes of labor, is inevitable and necessary to lower the cost of living, and the country can not proceed in an orderly way until these changes take place. This, however, is a subject within itself, and I must not further infringe upon your time.

The natural laws of supply and demand are at work. If these be allowed to operate, unfettered by governmental restraint, the country will soon be restored to normal and business move forward with steady gait.

The ship of state, having successfully encompassed the storm of war when the skies were dark and foreboding and the ominous waves rolled mountain high, is now proceeding as best it can through a choppy sea; yet we should not be dismayed, for such conditions are the natural sequel to war. As I look ahead I see for our country a bright and smiling future, enticing us forward and stimulating to perseverance.

In due course of time our good old ship will reach tranquil waters, and then, as an evidence of the faith and as a testimony to the wisdom of the fathers, will sail on a summer sea by the light of a happy moon to a grand and glorious destiny.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEONIDAS C. DYER,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 24, 1921.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks I include the following:

REMARKS OF DR. SAO KE ALFRED SZE, CHINESE MINISTER TO THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, BEFORE THE KNIFE AND FORK CLUB, KANSAS CITY, MO., OCTOBER 22, 1921.

Although the State of Missouri, of which Kansas City is its western metropolis, is located in the geographical center of the United States and many miles away from direct commercial contact with my country, I do not feel an entire stranger when I come to Kansas City and to Missouri. We have had many points of direct contact, some of which you may not be so familiar with yourselves. In Shanghai we have an important college, called the Shanghai Baptist College, that was founded and is largely financed by the good people of Missouri. The president of the college is Dr. White, a native Missourian, and the treasurer of the Baptist Missionary Board in China, Dr. J. T. Proctor, is a native of Kansas City. On the corner stone of this college appears the name of Mr. E. W. Stephens, one of the honored citizens of this State, who lives in Columbia, your State university city. I do not know whether you are familiar with the fact that the first American newspaper to be established in my country was founded by a Missouri newspaper man and a graduate of your State university. I refer to Mr. Thomas F. Millard, of Rolla, Mo. In addition to Mr. Millard, we have quite a large number of other graduates of your State School of Journalism now engaged in their profession in China. One of these men, Mr. J. B. Powell, is now editor of a widely read magazine published in Shanghai, and he has associated with him Mr. Don D. Patterson, formerly connected with your Kansas City Star, and two fellow countrymen of mine, Mr. Hollington K. Tong, now an influential journalist of Peking, China, and Mr. Hin Wong, a prominent journalist and editor of Canton, China, and both of these men received their training in the University of Missouri. I refer to these things especially, for it is through the avenues of education and the press that we become better acquainted, and when we become better acquainted our differences melt away.

We also have commercial contacts, for the products of your great packing plants and other factories are sold in my country, and we hope in the future that Kansas City may share to a much larger extent in the great commercial and industrial development that is going on in the Far East and in which we hope that the United States of America will soon take a larger share—a share to which your economic and industrial supremacy and your territorial position entitle you.

And while we are on the subject of the contact and relationship of China and Missouri, I also desire to refer to the work of the official Representatives of Missouri in the Congress of the United States. Probably the most important piece of legislation now under consideration, from the standpoint of the commercial relations of China and the United States, is being fathered by a Missourian, Hon. L. C. DYER, Congressman from St. Louis. This is known as the China trade act, and is designed to provide the machinery for a fuller cooperation of American and Chinese business men in the upbuilding of our mutual commercial interests. In addition to this, and in a field that comes very near to the hearts of every one of our 400,000,000 people, I want to assure you that China appreciates the fact that the Senators from Missouri, both of them, stood for justice and fair dealing for China when the question of Shantung was being debated in your national legislative body.

In my study of American history, I find that the United States of America has developed but two international or world policies. One is the Monroe doctrine, which applies to this continent, and the other is the open-door policy of equal opportunity which applies to the countries of Asia. There is now a pretty general understanding of the meaning of the Monroe doctrine everywhere, among all peoples. Former Secretary of State Robert Lansing once made the following statement regarding the meaning of the American Monroe doctrine:

"The Monroe doctrine was not an assertion of primacy or paramount interest by the United States in its relation to other American republics; its purpose was to prevent foreign powers from interfering with the separate rights of any nation in this hemisphere, and that the whole aim was to preserve to each republic the power of self-development; that so far as aiding in this development, the United States claimed no special privileges over other countries."

Now, as I, a citizen of the Republic of China, look at the matter, you do not want to see the countries of Europe extending their political spheres over the republics of the New World of North and South America. Furthermore, you do not claim for yourselves any special political or economic privileges or any spheres of influence. You have no desire to close the door of free economic opportunity to your commercial rivals. The real essence of your Monroe doctrine, as I view it, is the prevention of foreign interference in the free political development of Latin America, an interference which would inevitably disrupt the peace of the New World. In brief, you do not want the New World "Balkanized," to use a familiar term, with a lot of powerful outside nations constantly scheming and plotting for mastery. In insisting upon the general recognition of your Monroe doctrine, you have produced a condition of world peace upon the American Continent that closely approaches the ideal. You have a border of approximately 3,000 miles between the United States and the Dominion of Canada that is maintained without the use of a single armed soldier or a single battleship. In South America we see great countries like Argentina and Chile getting along peacefully without armed soldiers or armored fortresses on either side. In the United States you have 48 States, all living together in peace and happiness and general prosperity, without customs barriers or defensive forces.

As I mentioned previously, the United States in its history as a nation has developed but two world policies, one the Monroe doctrine and the other the open-door policy. The latter applies in the Pacific Ocean and has its greatest interest and application to my country, the Republic of China. I believe that the open-door policy, originally enunciated by Mr. John Hay, Secretary of State nearly a quarter of a century ago, means practically the same as your Monroe doctrine. In brief, when you speak of the open door of equal opportunity you mean literally that the territory of China shall be preserved to the people of China and that the Chinese people have the right of self-development. Now, that is a doctrine which in its practical application and in its simplicity is perfectly understandable to the Americans and Chinese alike. The principle of self-development is a principle that the American people have always demanded for themselves, and it is but natural that a doctrine found satisfactory for your own peace and happiness should also be desired in your relations with other peoples. You have demonstrated this in your work in the Philippines and Cuba. We in China know exactly what you mean when Secretary of State Hughes states, as he recently did in a note to my Government, that—

"The Government of the United States has never associated itself with any arrangement which sought to establish any special rights or privileges in China which would abridge the rights or privileges of the subjects or citizens of any other friendly States, and I am happy to assure you that it is the purpose of this Government neither to participate nor to acquiesce in any arrangement which might purport to establish in favor of foreign interests any superiority of rights with respect to commercial or economic development in designated regions of the territories of China."

Preparations are now being made in Washington for a conference on limitation of armament and the discussion of Pacific and far eastern questions. When I left your National Capital the delegates from my country, from Belgium, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, and Portugal were beginning to arrive. From the standpoint of the Republic of China, the most important element in the coming conference has to do with the problems of the Pacific and the Far East, and as such they affect the future peace and destiny of my country vitally. That they also affect the future peace and destiny of the United States of America is shown in the words of President Harding's invitation to the conference when he said:

"It is quite clear that there can be no final assurance of the peace of the world in the absence of the desire for peace, and the prospects of reduced armaments is not a hopeful one unless this desire finds expression in practical effort to remove the causes of misunderstanding and to seek ground for agreement as to principles and their application. It is the earnest wish of this Government that through an interchange of views with the facilities afforded by a conference it may be possible to find a solution of Pacific and far eastern problems of unquestioned importance at this time—that is, such common understandings with respect to matters which have been and are of international concern as may serve to promote enduring friendship among our peoples."

To these friendly words of your President, my country replied partly as follows:

"A conference for the purpose stated meets with the hearty concurrence of the Government of the Republic of China. Since the conclusion of the war in Europe the fear is general that there may again be a recurrence of the horrors of war. Furthermore, the center of gravity in matters international has recently shifted to the Pacific and the Far East. China occupies an important place not only on account of the extent of its territory and the density of its population but also on account of its geographical position. The Pacific and far eastern questions as viewed by the Chinese people are questions affecting the peace of the world of the present day. This conference at Washington, called by the President of the United States for the promotion of peace, can not but contribute in a large measure to the accomplishment of results that will enable the people of the world to enjoy prosperity and happiness and obtain permanent release from the calamities of war. It is with special satisfaction that the Government of the Republic of China makes known its desire to cooperate on a footing of equality with other Governments in this beneficent movement."

Now, China is entering the conference called by President Harding whole-heartedly and with full confidence in the desire of the American people to bring about better conditions in the Pacific. Recently when I was asked what China expected to get from the conference, I replied that China would be exceedingly modest at this international gathering; that all we desired was the right to preserve our national existence. Although my country has been the victim of the worst forms of aggressions, we are entering the conference with amity for all and enmity toward none. We only want justice.

When we consider the viewpoints of China and America seriously and examine into their underlying motives, we must come to the profound belief that America and China desire the same things. We want our respective peoples to have the right of self-development, and hence are fighting for the same principles. Really, why should not the United States of America, the oldest successful Republic in the world, and China, the youngest Republic in the world, work together in fighting for similar principles of justice and take the lead in establishing the principles of the doctrine of the open door and equal opportunities as a guiding axiom in the peaceful relations of the nations?

Now, I am asked why I am optimistic regarding the prospects of the coming conference to bring about better conditions in the Pacific. The reason I am optimistic is that I firmly believe that America is sincere in her desire for laying the foundation for future peace, and that to obtain this peace America is going to lay all of her cards on the table and ask that the other nations of the Pacific do likewise. This is exactly what China desires; she also plans to place all of her cards on the table. America desires to remove the causes of friction and misunderstanding that hinder the development of world peace. China has always been a peaceful nation; in fact, Col. Roosevelt once held us up to public ridicule as an awful example of what a policy of pacifism could do for a nation. We do not want to convert our millions of peace-loving people into militarists. We would rather gather with you around a table in the hope that some good may come from a general discussion of all of our problems. All countries should welcome this conference, and no nation should object to a conference to remove the causes of friction.

We see in the newspapers nowadays a great deal about our Province of Shantung, and I am told that the word "Shantung" has come to mean a great deal to the American people. People are constantly asking me about Shantung and how it is affected by the American open-door policy. Geographically our Province of Shantung is the doorway to the middle of our country, something like the State of Pennsylvania, which points to the heart of America. Politically it is the doorway to our capital of Peking. Commercially it is one of the principal sources of our coal and iron. Religiously it is the birthplace of our ancient teacher and sage, Confucius, and the birthplace of our civilization. Shantung Province supplied more than 100,000 laborers to the western front in the European war, and these strong men from north China dug the trenches and moved the food and other merchandise and participated in building and repairing tanks, that assisted greatly in allied victory. Shantung has always supplied the labor for the development of Manchuria and Siberia. Up to the beginning of the European war and previous to the political change brought about in Shantung by the European war Shantung Province supplied all the beef for the American forces in the Philippine Islands. Do you know that you used to get a great proportion of your peanuts from our Shantung farmers; that most of the straw braid from which you make your straw hats in the summer time formerly came from Shantung Province? Shantung Province has a population of 38,344,000 people, and is one of the most densely populated sections of the earth. In many ways our Province of Shantung typifies the extent to which aggressive nations will go in gratifying their selfish ambitions. First Germany took our Province by force because two of the German missionaries were killed by Chinese robbers. Then the World War came on and Japan and Great Britain drove Germany out, and the peace conference left Japan in the possession of our Shantung. It was the original seizure of Shantung that caused Mr. Hay to announce his open-door policy. It is the continued military occupation of Shantung by another power that provides one of the chief problems that is confronting the Pacific powers. So Shantung has come to mean almost the same thing to you that it has come to mean to us.

China wants to settle the Shantung question, but in settling it we want to settle it in full justice to our own nation and people and in full conformity with your policy of the open door of equal opportunity.

China became a republic only about a dozen years ago. We are beset with most of the troubles that all nations have gone through in changing their form of government. In addition we have the problem of warding off the aggressions of powerful neighbors who cast covetous eyes upon our rich, undeveloped resources. It required the United States nearly a century to become a strong, unified nation after you achieved independence from Europe. Since you have gone through these struggles yourself, we know that you have a full appreciation of our troubles; that you will be sympathetic and charitable with us in our efforts to do in Asia what you have done in America—develop our own country in our own peaceful way, to the end that we, too, may make our contribution to the future civilization and well-being of the world.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MELVIN O. McLAUGHLIN,

OF NEBRASKA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, October 26, 1921.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following letter:

CONSOLIDATION OF GOVERNMENT SCIENCE UNDER SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 28, 1921.

DEAR DOCTOR: I trust you will consider this letter as if I had written it out with my own hand and honor me with as early a reply as possible.

It is very desirable that the opinions of leading American scientists be obtained as to the reorganization and more especially consolidation of Government scientific bureaus under one head or department. I desire, therefore, to present a tentative plan for this purpose. Any suggestions or criticisms from you will be presented with those of other leading scientists to the joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government for their careful consideration and action.

It is the first time in the history of our Government that the Executive and both parties in Congress have all been seriously in favor of reorganization and consolidation of Government bureaus and departments. If the scientific bureaus are to be benefited they must receive serious and early consideration.

It is self-evident that if Government sciences were consolidated under one head they would receive more attention and obtain much greater support. But there is nothing to be gained in forming a new department for this purpose when already there exists an institution which has great prestige and represents the science of the Government in a general way. It is the Smithsonian Institution. It is proposed that this organization should be developed not only in its own bureaus but also by placing all scientific bureaus of the Government under it with possibly a few exceptions. It is sometimes said that the Smithsonian Institution is a private organization. This, of course, is not true, as it already receives more than $600,000 annually from the Government as an appropriation for its work.

A scientific reorganization and consolidation of all the Government departments and bureaus is the purpose of this general movement, inaugurated by the President, and this is especially needed in the scientific bureaus.

Here the great aim in view is eventually to have our Government science developed to the highest possible efficiency.

It is generally agreed that too many departments or Cabinet officers are undesirable and unwieldy and that the number should not be increased but rather diminished. The reorganization and consolidation of scientific bureaus is right in line with this idea. Moreover, the scientific bureaus are scattered all over the Government, many of them illogically or haphazardly placed, and as a result they may have little or no influence, and consequently the scientific workers are paid shameful and minimum salaries. The consolidation of governmental science under the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution will tend to give more influence and efficiency to science and divorce it, as far as possible, from politics.

If, for instance, any scientific bureau is taken from a department and placed under the Smithsonian Institution, having all its personnel and appropriations intact, the main and perhaps only important difference will be that the chief or director of this bureau will be under a scientific man with knowledge of and sympathy for scientific work, instead of under a Cabinet officer, who is not expected to be very conversant with science. Moreover, the Cabinet officer is liable to be changed every four years, and sometimes oftener, so that the chief of a scientific bureau whose heart is in his work, not to mention uncertainty as to his tenure of office, for other than scientific reasons, is kept in much uncertainty as to sympathetic help in his endeavor to develop his work.

The Smithsonian Institution deals mainly with pure science and scientific bureaus of the Government function principally with applied science. As an applied science is based upon pure science, they both help one another. Sometimes pure science gets a little too pure and drifts in the air, and sometimes applied science becomes a little too practical or commercial or mercenary. But if both these phases of science are put together they tend to reach a happy medium. The foundation, pure science, should not be separated from its superstructure, applied science.

The plan is to place the following 33 bureaus or Government organizations under the Smithsonian Institution, together with all their personnel and appropriations intact:

1. Geological Survey.
2. Reclamation Service.
3. Bureau of Mines.
4. Patent Office.

5–16. All scientific bureaus of the Agriculture Department (12 in number), affording these bureaus still greater opportunity to develop and benefit still further the agriculture of our country.

17. Vital and criminalogical and other abnormal statistics of the Census Office.
18. Bureau of Standards.
19. Bureau of Fisheries.
20. Hygienic Laboratory.
21. Bureau of Public Health Service.
22. Army Medical Museum and Library.
23. Government Hospital for the Insane.
24. Coast and Geodetic Survey.
25. Library of Congress, to be called Library of the United States.

26–32. Bureaus of the Smithsonian Institution itself (seven in all). These bureaus are named as a concrete working basis. The inclusion of all or any particular one is not necessary to the plan.

33. Naval Observatory.

In reading over this list of scientific bureaus objections occur to us instinctively, but when we analyze them we will find that most of these objections are from a long-established habit of regarding various bureaus in connection with the particular department under which we have been accustomed to associate them. I assume that every bureau chief with the scientific spirit will not object to the consolidation of Government science on account of some personal inconvenience to himself. The true scientific man is always willing to make some sacrifice, if necessary, when the good of all Government science is sought.

The prospect of being under a sympathetic man rather than a political appointee should encourage every scientific man to consider any plan with this in view most seriously. If any one of these 35 bureaus should be found not to function as well as formerly under the Smithsonian Institution, it will be very easy to put such a bureau back in its old position or some other better place. But it is very probable that a great scientific independent and nonpolitical department would be considered a most desirable place to be in, where everyone is imbued with the same spirit for the advancement of science in all its branches, pure and applied, working together mutually for this common end. Such an atmosphere would please any scientist.

Now, it may occur to some that 33 different scientific bureaus under one head is rather a large proposition. My answer to this objection is that, on the contrary, it is an advantage from the scientific point of view, because too much organization and resultant red tape are not desirable in scientific work. My idea is to put this plan on a high university plane, with university freedom for each bureau. Thus the president of a large university would not think of suggesting or dictating, for instance, to the professor of chemistry how he should conduct his experiments. One of the main duties of a university president is to distribute the available funds among the different faculties according to their real needs and not to interfere in the least with the professors' methods.

The president of a large university has a hundred or more professorships, divisions, laboratories, and faculties under his jurisdiction; these are practically bureaus. Moreover, this plan would be in fact a department of science without a cabinet officer, but with a permanent nonpolitical head or secretary. Such a department of science would do research work, both in applied and pure science, and for this very reason there should be more freedom allowed than in a university, which is mainly a lecture and pedagogical system, where there might be reason for restriction. Yet, curious to say, the opposite condition seems to exist in scientific bureaus of our Government.

I fail to understand why the public money should not be spent on as high a plane as the private funds of a large university.

Nearly all, if not all, of the objections to this plan apply to a large university under a president elected by a board of trustees. The main objections that have been made are the following: That too much power is given to one man; that there are too many bureaus under one head; that the work would not have immediate contact with the people; that many Government bureaus are held strictly accountable by the public for definite lines of research; that some of the bureaus mentioned would be out of place; that politics might creep in if there were larger allotments; that it might discourage scientific spirit by taking a scientific bureau from a department; that it is a plan for the Washington men to work out.

The president of a large university like Michigan is elected by a board of trustees; the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution is chosen by a board of regents. There is little, certainly no substantial, difference, and if there should prove to be Congress could remedy it.

Are not the Universities of Michigan, California, Minnesota, and Wisconsin (all State institutions) successful?

Are they not near to the people? Has the politics that may have crept in spoiled them? Is not scientific spirit encouraged in large universities? The objections to the plan prove too much.

Briefly, this consolidation plan for science in our Government is to give each chief of each bureau free and full independence as far as the work of his bureau is concerned and then to hold him responsible for results. As it is, he may be under narrow or even arbitrary limitations, if not meddled with, and yet held responsible, at least by the public, to whom he can not explain.

Each chief or director of a bureau would send in his estimates for new specialists, experimental work, and clerical service to the head of the Smithsonian Institution, who would study these estimates and recommend them to Congress. Later the head could take each one of the specialists before the Appropriations Committee to present to that committee the reasons why he wants these additional appropriations. This procedure would be wholesome, for the specialists would become acquainted with the committee and its legislative point of view, and the committee would be educated up to the real needs of science. When the late Secretary of Agriculture, Wilson, first came into this department, over which he presided 16 years under both political parties, he said to his bureau chiefs, "Gentlemen, I am not here to boss you but to help you." Secretary Wilson fulfilled his promise, and the result is that Agriculture is the leading scientific department of the Government. Secretary Wilson, of Agriculture, is a model for everyone in power in our Government to follow.

While it is not at present my purpose to go into too many details of this plan, I will venture to make a few suggestions as to certain bureaus and also some general observations. The Census Bureau should be called the United States statistical bureau; the word "census" is now misleading, since it is only appropriate once in 10 years when the census is taken. The Library of Congress should be called the Library of the United States or National Library. This change in name and its transfer to the Smithsonian Institution would not in the least curtail any privileges accorded to Members of Congress. The name Library of Congress was appropriate once, but at present this library is much more than a Library of Congress. The title of a library should at least cover its field of action like the title of a book.

The Smithsonian Institution has a library of nearly 100,000 volumes and the United States Surgeon General's library has nearly 200,000 books, and most of these scientific bureaus to come under the Smithsonian Institution have specialistic libraries. This combination of the several libraries under the Smithsonian Institution would tend, of course, to reduce expenses by avoiding duplication of books. As it is at present, the libraries are scattered about, making it very difficult to find out where the duplication exists. There may be an objection to placing the Library of Congress under the Smithsonian Institution, but the main difference would be that the office of the Library of Congress would not be an independent institution under Congress, but just as independent under the Smithsonian Institution. Instead of leaving the present and most competent incumbent alone in his efforts to develop his great library, he would receive additional aid and encouragement from the head of this new and greatest department of the Government. In such an atmosphere library science could develop more freely and more easily. The same would be true practically for all bureaus coming under this independent department of science in its broadest sense. In fact, there is already a Smithsonian Division in the Library of Congress. The term "library science" has come to stay; the Library of Congress, which is developing library science to a high degree of efficiency, could well come under the Smithsonian Institution.

But some one says, How about literature and history? Yes; there is a science of literature and history, at least there are scientific methods being applied to them; also scientific philological studies are already being carried on under the science of anthropology.

Helmholtz once said that the number of sciences would become so great that it would be almost impossible to learn their names. Science and scientific methods have now the floor in the realm of knowledge, and are fast entering into all new fields. Let the United States lead the world in these new directions on the frontiers of knowledge; the United States can do this if it will, and an opportunity now is given to take the first step which is to place all Government science under the Smithsonian Institution.

In our country medical science is already leading other nations in certain respects. But Government medical science has not been very influential nor is it taking the position which its importance demands. A beginning has been made, however, in the Bureau of Public Health Service, the Army Medical Museum and Library, and the Government Hospitals for the Insane. In all these three bureaus to be placed under the Smithsonian Institution, scientific work is carried on. The catalogue of the Surgeon General's library, consisting of a very large number of volumes, in three separate series, is considered in Europe the best work in this line in the world. Yet, through the mistaken economy of Congress, this library has been compelled to reduce this most valuable catalogue in size and practically hamper its utility. The Government Hospital for the Insane has done some most advanced and valuable work on the brain. These medical organizations fall naturally under the consolidation of Government science. At present they have most inadequate appropriations and salaries, but under the present proposed plan they would receive special attention and help.

I might suggest also that in inviting scientific men to take up permanent work under the Government it be understood, and so stated, that they can not be removed from their positions without very serious cause; that their work is their life work, and considered from the point of view of a university professorship. If such a plan should be followed, there would not be any great difficulty—as there is now—of obtaining the best scientists to work under our Government. The salary should be adequate, but not necessarily large. A true scientific man in love with his work is more concerned about permanency of his position and independence in his work than salary. We would then have, probably, under this plan, the greatest department of Government, without a Cabinet officer, but under a permanent head.

But how about getting the right man for such a place? The men who elect the head of the Smithsonian Institution are the Chief Justice of the United States, who is chancellor of the Board of Regents, which consists of the Vice President, three Members of the Senate, including both political parties; three Members of the House, also including both parties; and six citizens of the United States, who are at present: Alexander Graham Bell, John B. Anderson, both of Washington, D. C.; George Grey, of Delaware; Charles F. Choate, jr., of Massachusetts; Henry White, of Maryland; and Robert S. Brookings, of Missouri. There could hardly be a much more trustworthy body of men for choosing a scientist for the place, when at some future time it becomes necessary to elect a successor to the very able and distinguished scientist who now is at the head of the Smithsonian Institution.

The scientist elected to be the head of this new scientific department would probably not be thoroughly conversant with more than three or four sciences, so that there would be under him, say, some 30 scientific bureaus, the domain of which he really knows little or nothing about. If he should favor his own science to the disadvantage of other sciences, or if he should meddle in the work of the other bureaus, he would not be able to stand long the criticism of scientific men. But there is very little probability of this, and if it should occur, publicity, the greatest power in this country, would soon correct it.

In most of the departments, except the Agricultural, there are relatively very few scientific bureaus, usually only 2 or 3, over against some 15, 20, or 30 other divisions or bureaus. Of course, such scientific bureaus are generally only helped by their departments to the extent they are useful to the department itself, and this depends upon the opinion of a Cabinet officer who is usually ignorant of science. The result is that many of these scientific bureaus scattered about in the departments are developed very slowly, if not standing still. Their appropriations are very inadequate, their service much crippled, and, worst of all, their independence greatly limited. Of course, no first-class scientist would take such a place or remain in it long unless compelled by force of circumstances. With very few exceptions, these scattered bureaus of science could serve these departments at least just as well and probably much better if under the jurisdiction of the Smithsonian Institution.

SUMMARY OF PLAN.

The purpose and advantages of this plan for the consolidation of Government science under the Smithsonian Institution are summed up as follows:

1. To develop Government science to the highest possible efficiency.
2. To correct illogical and haphazard arrangements of bureaus or departments.
3. To reduce political influence in scientific bureaus to a minimum.
4. The efficient development of scientific bureaus under a scientific head is much more probable than under a political head.
5. To unite pure and applied science into a happy medium, increasing the efficiency of both.
6. To encourage scientific men in their work, which makes toward efficiency.
7. To put Government scientific work upon the high university plane.
8. To avoid duplication of scientific work, appropriations, and duplication of library books. It also facilitates their proper distribution.
9. To advance Government medical science, which has been much neglected.
10. To give permanency of position and independence to experts, making it possible to get the best men of science to work for the Government.
11. To make very improbable interference or meddling of the head in the work of the many bureaus under him.
12. To lessen one Cabinet officer and one independent bureau.

I trust you and every scientist to whom this letter is sent will express his views freely as to this plan or propose any new plan at your earliest possible convenience, and should he not desire his name mentioned will so indicate, in which case I shall, of course, follow his wishes. Requesting that all letters be typewritten, I have the honor to remain,

Most faithfully, ARTHUR MACDONALD.

(Address: Arthur MacDonald, the Congressional, 100 East Capitol Street, Washington, D. C.)

N. B.: If you are a member of any scientific or medical organization, I should be glad if you would have, as soon as possible, the following resolution (or some similar one) presented and acted upon as early as possible.

Resolved, That the ——— ——— favors the general plan of putting the scientific bureaus of the Government at Washington under the jurisdiction of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, with the view of developing Government science to its highest possible efficiency by affording workers permanent tenure of office, greater freedom in investigations, noninterference of politics, and adequate salaries.

After the resolution is acted upon kindly have it sent to me at once, to be presented to the joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government. I am requesting scientific indorsement at the suggestion of the chairman of the joint committee.

Disarmament Conference Beginning November 11 Supreme Hope of the World.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. SUMMERS,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, October 27, 1921.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker—

I am happy to bring you word that your Government is doing all it can to bring about a conference of nations and to have their spokesmen look each other in the face and come to an understanding that will remove the causes of war. Not a surrender of nationality, which we cherish; not a surrender of our liberties, of our right to determine the ways we shall pursue, but to remove the reasons for war and put an end to costly armaments. I believe we shall succeed.

Mr. Speaker, these optimistic words from the President of the United States seem to be fully justified. The attention of the world has been focused on America since the President issued, through the Secretary of State, a tentative suggestion that Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, and our own country should sit down around a table in friendly fashion and discuss the limitation of armaments.

From the beginning our National Capital was agreed on as the place of meeting, but there were many other preliminary problems to be decided. Our friends across the Atlantic desired delay, but at last all have agreed to the date desired by America, and November 11, 1921, armistice day, will go into history as a red-letter day in the progress of the world.

Great Britain has left to America the topics to be discussed. Japan could not readily agree that the problems of the Pacific should be considered at this conference, but on this question the United States has quietly but firmly maintained her position. Without a general discussion and understanding in regard to conflicting interests in and beyond the Pacific disarmament would be impossible. Japan has acquiesced.

Not only has the scope of the conference broadened, but the United States, Great Britain, Japan, France, Italy, China, Netherlands, Belgium, and Portugal have now been invited. As a matter of fact, China, full of gratitude and fully trusting her old friend the United States, was the first nation to unqualifiedly accept our invitation to the disarmament table.

CONFERENCE BRINGS GOOD WILL.

The air of suspicion which early manifested itself in some quarters is passing away, and already an air of confidence and good will pervades the world. This could scarcely have been accomplished except by the mutual agreement that the conference shall frankly consider, discuss, and if possible come to an understanding on the problems under consideration, but that no votes shall be taken and no attempts shall be made to compel, coerce, or diplomatically "hog tie" any of the participating nations.

Just as friends may meet and freely discuss their mutual problems with no effort to embarrass one of their number or to "put him in a hole," so will the great nations of the earth discuss world problems here in November.

The high regard for the rights of other peoples always manifested by us has made it possible for the United States to assemble a disarmament conference without arousing the suspicions of other nations.

There is every evidence of a genuine hope that the financial burdens of armaments and the possibilities of war may be minimized.

This buoyant hope has gripped the people and is now fully shared by those sagacious statesmen who can only approach the ideal when lead by the masses. The movement gathers momentum as the day approaches. The Christian citizenship of all nations gives it strength. The supreme hope of the world since the dawn of civilization centers around the council table. And why?

WORLD IS DEBAUCHING ITSELF.

The world is debauching itself by expenditures on preparations for war or in preparing to preserve the peace of the world, if you please to so consider it.

Past wars and the preparation for future wars absorb more than 90 cents out of every dollar raised by every conceivable form of taxation in America, and the same is true in all the great nations of the earth.

From 1900 to 1914 these same nations only expended a total of fourteen and a half billions, while sixteen and a half billions of dollars was spent in 1920 for military and naval purposes by five great nations that will gather here November 11.

Ten dollars from every man, woman, and child in the world would be necessary to complete the armaments now contemplated.

President Harding says this wanton waste should stop; and why not? The civilization of every land applauds. From the graves of thirty millions who perished in the World War comes the mute appeal.

The World War has cost the nations that engaged in it, in money alone, $250,000,000,000—as much as the entire wealth of the United States.

Italy owes 100 cents for every dollar she owns. In other words, Italy has no assets. Can she keep up the pace?

Hungary is on the verge of bankruptcy and Austria has toppled.

Great Britain's war debt is staggering, and she and France, Russia, Belgium, and Greece confess they can not at this time pay interest long since due.

For a hundred years Germany must bend her back beneath her war debt and indemnity.

The United States and Japan, among the nations that engaged in the war, are the only ones that are in reasonably good financial condition, and they will feel the burden for two generations at least.

FINANCIAL COST TO UNITED STATES.

The World War cost the United States more than she had expended for all purposes in the 128 preceding years.

December, 1918, after the signing of the armistice, was the high-water mark for expenditures by this or any other nation in all the world's history. This Nation spent more in that one month than during the first 72 years of her existence. During each day of December, 1918, we spent more than during our first 11 years as a nation. Can any taxpayer remember this and wonder why taxes are high?

A study of our finances, covering the past 70 years, shows interesting per capita expenditures of the United States. Here are a few illustrative figures:

Per capita expenditures in—

1860	2.01
1870 (following the Civil War)	7.61
1880	5.28
1900 (following the War with Spain)	6.39
1919 (following the World War)	144.77

While still coping with World War problems our Federal expenditures from June 30, 1919, to June 30, 1920, were $5,686,576,000. The War and Navy Departments absorbed during that year $1,424,138,677, or 25 per cent of the whole. The sum of $3,855,000,000, or 67 per cent, went for previous wars, in the way of pensions, compensation, and so forth.

During the same year, for primary governmental functions, $181,000,000 was expended, or a fraction over 3 per cent.

For public works of every description $168,000,000, or less than 3 per cent, was spent, and—

For research and education, $57,093,660, or 1 per cent of the whole amount, was expended.

THE REAL COST OF WAR.

I have endeavored to show you the financial cost of war, but this is as a drop of water in a great ocean when we visit Arlington National Cemetery and pay homage to the memory of our own heroic dead and think of the 30,000,000 of new war-made graves that dot the hillsides and vales of every land. It is as a grain of sand on the seashore when laid down beside the broken hearts of millions of widows and mothers. It can in no way be compared with the cost to multitudes of little children who are deprived of a father's support and a father's counsel.

The money cost of any war is forgotten when we visit Walter Reed and other hospitals and look upon marred faces, empty sleeves, legless bodies, and eyes that can not behold the beauties of God's handiwork and will never—no never again—greet their loved ones.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES LEADS THE WORLD IN LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS.

That the Congress of the United States believes in the reduction and limitation of armaments is shown by the following figures:

For the year ending June 30, 1921 (estimates submitted December, 1919):

Requested by Secretary of War, Mr. Baker	$991,400,857.00
Allowed by Congress	448,793,537.00
Saving by Congress	542,607,320.00
Requested by Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels	582,631,254.00
Allowed by Congress	495,260,295.25
A saving by Congress of	87,370,959.75

Then for the year ending June 30, 1922, the figures are as follows (estimates submitted December, 1920):

Requested by Secretary of War, Mr. Baker	$699,275,502
Allowed by Congress	328,013,529
A saving by Congress of	371,261,973
Requested by Secretary of Navy, Mr. Daniels	679,515,731
Allowed by Congress	410,673,289
A saving by Congress of	268,842,442

Two years ago, several months after the armistice was signed, the Secretary of War, Mr. Baker, recommended an Army of 570,000 men. Congress appropriated for an Army of 175,000 men. Nevertheless Mr. Baker recruited an Army of 230,000, and a few months ago the Congress, by law, reduced the Army to 150,000.

Meanwhile the Navy has been reduced from 229,000 to 120,000 men.

The amounts just mentioned still loom large when we remember that for the upbuilding of good citizenship, for the Americanization of our foreign born, for the various departments of Government research, and for such educational work as the Government contributes to, we appropriate only 1 per cent, while wars, past and anticipated, absorb almost 93 per cent of our revenues.

America is in better financial condition than any other nation in the world. However, these figures show why peace-loving America is greatly interested financially in the limitation of armaments.

FINANCIAL MILLSTONES CAN BE LIFTED BY MUTUAL AGREEMENT.

Let me emphasize the fact that the great financial millstone around the neck of every great nation is its navy. Nevertheless, until a mutual agreement to curtail navies is arrived at, no first-rate power can afford to neglect this—its first line of defense.

President Harding has seized upon an opportune hour to try for this mutual agreement.

The German fleet, which was second to Great Britain's, is gone. Russia and Austria-Hungary are not to be considered, and the fleets of France and Italy have not been kept up to date.

Great Britain, the United States, and Japan are the great naval powers of to-day that must be reckoned with. The strength of these powers on the sea is shown by the following tables:

In commission.

	Great Britain.		United States.		Japan.

In addition, the British Parliament has authorized four super-Hoods on which construction is to begin in 1922 unless the United States shall renounce a part of her navy-building program, which was adopted in 1916.

In this connection it should be borne in mind that it requires several years to build a battleship, and that the vast expenditures in the American Navy to-day are the result of the "big-navy program" which was agreed upon and the construction of which was begun five years ago.

A first-class battleship of the type now demanded would cost, when fully equipped, $50,000,000 in any country. Great Britain can ill afford such outlays on her super-Hoods while she owes the United States $4,500,000,000.

Japan is striving to complete her "eight-eight" program of eight battleships and eight battle cruisers. One-fifth of the income of the Japanese Government is pouring into the construction of these fighting ships.

And yet Japanese, British, or American battleships are almost out of date before they are completed. The newer ships with greater speed and guns of longer range make other and yet newer fighting craft always a necessity, and so the unending contest for naval supremacy will continue until a limitation of armaments is agreed upon.

PROBLEMS OF THE PACIFIC.

The problems of the Pacific are the real problems of the disarmament conference which meets here November 11. A recent Tokyo dispatch from Louis Leibold, published in the New York Herald and Washington Post, gives the following interesting information as to the claimants of the islands of the Pacific:

ISLANDS IMPORTANT DEFENSE.

A comparison of the distribution of the islands in the Pacific which would be called upon to play important parts in a war involving the future of Asia shows that Japan occupies a very formidable position. Of the 32 islands scattered between the Japanese coast and Australia that could be used to great advantage by the nations controlling them. Japan exercises more or less complete dominion over 6, not counting over 100 little islands around Japan itself.

The number of islands thus controlled by Japan is not so important as the location of them. All of them are situated north of the Equator and dot the waters within a radius of 2,000 miles of the sea. The Japanese islands given under mandate are the Carolines, with 56,000 population; the Marshall, with 15,000; the Ladrone (thief), with 5,000; and the Island of Yap, with 10,000. The combined territory of these islands is not far from 10,000 square miles. In addition to these, Japan controls the Pelew, the Ogasawara, and the Parry groups, the combined area of which is probably 5,000 square miles.

BRITAIN'S LARGE HOLDINGS.

The largest real estate holdings of any nation in the Pacific belong to the British Government, which controls the Fiji, the Phoenix, the Gilbert, the Pleasant, and eight small islands in the region of Australia, and, jointly with the French, the New Hebrides.

The United States, by direct acquisition, controls Hawaii, the Philippines, Wake, Guam, Marcus, and the Baker groups, extending over a stretch of the Pacific north of the Equator, with Baker Island on the fringe of it.

Under League of Nations mandates, Australia controls New Ireland and New Britain, formerly identified as the Bismarck group, and Madang.

New Zealand exercises mandatory privileges over New Guinea and German Samoa, the United States maintaining its previously acquired base at Pago Pago. Through previous acquisition the French control New Caledonia and Loyalty Islands and the Dutch the Island of Timor. In this distribution of Pacific island territory the Japanese find themselves advantageously placed almost directly in the line between the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands, over which the United States exercises direct control.

The distance from San Francisco to Hawaii is 2,100 miles, while Guam is separated by 3,337 miles from the United States territory in the Pacific, with the Philippines 1,500 miles distant to the west from Guam. Guam is located directly east of the Philippines and southwest from Honolulu.

BASES NEAR GUAM.

North of Guam is the Marianas group and 200 miles away to the northwest are the Ogasawara, both of which are controlled by Japan, and provide convenient stepping stones (or prospective naval bases) between Japan and Guam. South of Guam and almost on a line with the Panama Canal are the Caroline Islands. East of these are the Marshall Islands. There are a great many islands in each of these groups and most of them are so advantageously distributed that they would provide the Mikado's Government with unusually favorable facilities for naval operations and can be thoroughly fortified at comparatively small cost.

The strategic value of the Island of Yap is fully appreciated by Japan, and the impression exists here at Tokyo that she intends to assert her right under the authority of the Versailles treaty, despite the hostile attitude of the United States, which, on two occasions, has emphasized its objection to Japanese control over the vitally important cable station located on that island. Japanese officials believe the objections presented by Secretaries Colby and Hughes to the award of the cable from Yap to Shanghai will be withdrawn or ignored by the League of Nations.

WILL STAND BY RIGHTS.

It is admitted that there is no justification for this belief, but it is quite certain that Japan will offer every resistance in her power if a move is made to deprive her of what she considers her legal international rights in the matter.

For the time being Tokyo is disposed to set the matter aside in accordance with her traditional formula in treating protests of the sort that the United States has presented in the Yap controversy. It is not at all probable that she will overlook any opportunity to fasten her grip on not only the cable communications centering on the little nerve center in the Pacific but on the potential value of Yap as a prospective naval base.

While Yap is important only because it hooks up the submarine telegraphs between Shanghai, Tokyo, San Francisco, Borneo, Australia, and the Straits Settlements, its desirability is ever in the minds of the diplomats and statesmen of half the countries of the world. When first discovered by a Spanish navigator in the sixteenth century the island was called "Guap." For two centuries it remained under the control of the Spanish, though the population was largely made up of Malays, bearing a close resemblance to some of the types in the lesser Philippines.

SAW VALUE OF YAP.

Germany was the first of the larger nations to appreciate the geographical value of Yap, which the Spanish had not thought worth looking after. In 1884 a German gunboat raised the flag of the Kaiser on the island. The Spanish Government voiced a vigorous protest, and the Pope, who acted as arbitrator, decided in favor of the Spanish. After the Spanish-American War the Spanish Government sold the Carolines, together with the Pelew and Ladrone Islands, to Germany for about $4,000,000 and took over Yap, which was then a part of the Caroline group. Germany and the United States both realized the importance of Yap and Guam, 360 miles away, as cable bases.

An American cable runs from San Francisco to Honolulu, Guam, Manila, and Shanghai, while from Guam there is another cable, the southern part of which is American and the northern part Japanese, which goes to Yokohama. The German Government, through the agency of the German Netherlands Co., laid cables direct to Shanghai from Yap to Minado, in the Dutch East Indies, and from Yap to Guam.

CABLES AS WAR AID.

The Yap-Guam cable was of great service to Americans before the great World War, as it gave them an outlet by direct route to China. On the outbreak of the war with Germany the Japanese naval forces seized the Ladrone, Pelew, and Caroline Islands, including Yap. The Paris peace conference subsequently awarded the control of the Yap cable station to Japan.

Yap has an additional value in the eyes of the Japanese because of its proximity to the Carolines, the Mariana, and the Parry Islands, which have come under the control of the Mikado's Government. With a cable providing direct communication with Japan, with China, with Australia, the Straits Settlements and the United States at hand, the Japanese naval forces would enjoy a decided advantage over other nations, particularly in the event of war. And nobody knows this any better than the officials of the Government of Japan.

The advantages that the control of the Yap cables carry will not be overlooked or surrendered until every diplomatic and political device has been exhausted. Inquiry as to the manner in which the Mikado's Government will finally seek to set aside the protest of the United States elicits only vague and unsatisfactory replies, flavored with urbane assurances of the utmost respect for the wishes of the United States and courteous appreciation of its motives.

Herein lies many a hard nut that we hope may be cracked by the conference, but the problems of the mainland beyond the Pacific are even more vexing. A recent editorial in the Washington Post frankly discusses some of these problems:

It is broadly intimated that the United States Government would welcome a coalition of the Chinese governments for the purpose of obtaining for the Washington conference a delegation that would represent all the elements in China.

The significance of the Chinese situation in its bearing upon the forthcoming effort to reduce the greatest fleets is hardly realized in its fullness by the average citizen. He sees reports that the Japanese Government is making overtures to China to settle the Shantung controversy and is inclined to believe that the Far Eastern questions are moving toward settlement. It seems to him a far-fetched suggestion that the state of affairs in China directly affects him, his pocketbook, and perhaps his life. But that suggestion is the simple truth.

Unfortunately, the overtures made by Japan to China, touching on the Shantung controversy, do not meet the requirements of the situation for two reasons: First, there is no Chinese Government that can bind the Chinese people to any course of action or any policy; and, second, the Japanese proposals are unsatisfactory to the Chinese people. If Japan should make an agreement with the Peking government it would not settle the Shantung controversy but might precipitate a civil war which in turn might embroil the powers vitally interested in China. A boycott of Japan is threatened by the Chinese people in answer to the effort to adjust the Shantung question on the basis of Japan's proposals.

* * * * * * *

There is little room for optimism as a result of the suggestion that the Chinese factions get together to represent all China in the conference. * * * The southern Chinese openly charge that the Peking government is subsidized by Japanese interests, while the Peking government is equally frank in alleging corruption on the part of the Canton government. In the meantime mercenary armies are ravaging China and completing the work of disintegration. Thus there seems to be no probability that the Chinese people will be adequately represented at Washington, or that China can save herself. The great nations, in self-defense, for the sake of avoiding war, must save China by reaching an agreement with Japan.

WILL THE CONFERENCE SUCCEED.

These and many other problems await solution by the conference on partial disarmament. Will it succeed?

Viscount Bryce, former British ambassador to the United States, tells us—

The treaty of Versailles has received nothing but censure in Europe and has sown the seeds of future wars.

If this be true, we must proceed on different lines than that treaty.

Referring to the conference on partial disarmament Lord Northcliffe says:

We are very hopeful, but it must be remembered that a problem of 700 years can not be solved in 7 days.

China's note of acceptance says:

This conference at Washington, called by the President of the United States for the promotion of peace, can not but contribute in a large measure to the accomplishment of results that will enable the people of the world to enjoy prosperity and happiness and obtain permanent release from the calamities of war.

And the Government of China specifically states that it—will participate in the conference in the spirit of friendship and with a cordial appreciation of the importance of the elimination of the sources of controversy—

Thus emphasizing that the Chinese statesmen have grasped the full import of Secretary Hughes's plea for considerate and harmonious action.

President Harding in his Lancaster address said:

I would like to have much less of the resources for destruction and more of the resources for instruction in America. I would like to have less of toil to maintain arms and more of play to hearten the American people.

Seated in the room where Japan's national and world policies are determined Premier K. Hara said recently:

The day is past in Japan when the military party or any group of men can get together, concoct a scheme, and put it across without consulting the people. The people are coming to their own. Their power is growing. Public opinion is becoming a potent force in the life of the nation. This means peace, for the people are demanding peace. The present cabinet stands positively for peace.

A frank and candid discussion of the problems before us is always in order, but inflammatory addresses that would stir up strife should not be tolerated, whether uttered by statesmen, laymen, or in the yellow press.

LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS FAVORED IN EVERY LAND.

Public sentiment in favor of disarmament is widely voiced by the peoples of every country.

The soldiers of past wars have always become the apostles of peace. Having viewed at close range the bloodshed, the suffering, the debauchery, the wanton destruction of life and property, they abhor war and love peace.

I have discussed this question with all grades from privates to generals, with veterans of the Mexican War, the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and with many veterans of the World War. They are of one accord—they hate war and love an honorable peace. Shall we profit by their experience or shall the slaughter never cease?

Civic organizations everywhere have recorded their sentiment against war. Commercial bodies throughout the world are for peace. Federated Women's Clubs, whose members have tasted the bitterness of war are pleading for peace. Labor, the world around, says "Let us pursue our labors in peace and make war no more." Mothers, widows, and orphans without number are silently, eloquently pleading with tears and broken hearts that we prepare for peace rather than for war.

Finally, that greatest force in all the world, the Christian citizenship, is demanding in unmistakable tones that war and the preparation for war shall cease. The Federated Churches of Christ in America and the National Catholic Welfare Council of America are as one in their support of the disarmament conference.

I earnestly hope every religious and civic organization in my State of Washington and in the United States will further express its views in suitable resolutions and thereby show in an unmistakable manner at this time the attitude of our people.

This steady, friendly, unemotional public opinion when expressed in all countries will do much to make the conference a success.

The bloody pages of history are replete with diplomatic blunders and national errors costing millions upon millions of human lives. There have been few wars of modern times that could not have been averted by arbitration, and if, in addition to that, we now add a limitation of armaments, so that there will be fewer implements with which to fight, the chances of future conflicts can be greatly diminished and some of the billions now spent to kill can be spent in construction, in education, and in the pursuits of happiness.

Historical and Legal Phases of Religious Freedom.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARRY B. HAWES.

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 31, 1921.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker, liberty to-day seems so free that we forget the struggles which procured it and are not as vigilant in its preservation as its contribution to human happiness justifies.

Nothing of great value comes easily, and the blessings of religious liberty were secured by our forbears only after years of heroic struggle.

The foe of religious liberty has always been intolerance, sometimes disguised but always the same. It rises for brief periods to considerable strength, but always falls back to its obscure cave of bigotry before the enlightened criticism of good citizenship.

Its manifestations are ignored until it assumes an open, organized expression which invariably brings a reaction and with the reaction its defeat.

An intolerant man is obnoxious; he is never charitable; he is never generous; his sense of gratitude is small and his obligations to society are seldom paid. He makes a poor husband, a tyrannical parent, and an undesirable neighbor. He is not a good friend or even an agreeable companion, and contact with him is unpleasant. He does not understand the political institutions of our country. His mental equipment is defective; his is a congenital disease, an incurable brain limitation.

He can be ignored as a personal unit, but when his intolerance assumes the form of organization, and he attempts to extend his own bigotry into the field of politics and propaganda he becomes a public menace and must be condemned by every right-thinking American.

In periods of war and the reaction following war the intolerant, seizing upon the mental stress of abnormal conditions, commences his propaganda.

He sometimes attaches to himself the thoughtless and, by exaggerated and false statements, for a brief period secures a following.

The intolerant is hopeless mentally. As a social unit and as a citizen he can not be changed, but we may, by a frank statement of history, law, and experience, prevent his infection of the body politic and reduce his evil influence to the minimum.

Toleration has developed with education, enlightenment, and a proper understanding of the Christian religion. When we left paganism we abandoned intolerance and advanced to the higher grade of a conscience and religion procured and maintained by reason and persuasion, leaving to the Government only the proper function of protecting the right of each individual to pursue, in his own way, without interference from the State or citizen of a State, the fine exercise of personal choice in the matter of conscience and creed, modified only by the moral suasion of religious associations.

The first requisite for this natural religious selection was a complete separation of church and state and removing from a place in government all attempts to control spiritual conduct and confining its jurisdiction to the protection of the health, happiness, life, and property of the citizen.

The friend of religious liberty is not concerned with the difference between creeds, nor in fact with the difference between faith and unbelief. Nor can he be satisfied alone with the political separation of church and state. He must oppose the invisible government, the secret cabal, or the political movement, which attempt to do, by indirection, the thing which is prohibited by law.

The honest friend of religious freedom can not, without protest, permit any man's creed to be made the subject of persecution or the sole measure of his fitness for public office.

We can not lose religious freedom without losing civil freedom, so both must be guarded by zealous citizens.

Our danger will not come from a change in our laws but from an intolerant spirit which would evade the established law and, by indirection, do those things which the law prohibits.

PIONEER AMERICANS.

Our Nation is unlike all others because it is composed of so many different ethnic roots, which are again divided by difference in creed and religion.

We find amongst our early settlers English, Dutch, Scotch, Irish, German, French, Spanish, and Swiss citizens. As our Nation has developed, other race lines have been added.

They were hardy, virile men and women, who for the most part sought to cross the ocean and to build new homes in America because their particular form of worship was curtailed or prohibited by the nations of Europe. So that our best pioneer stock came to this country because of the religious intolerance of the Old World.

The leading countries of Europe frequently changed their state religion from Catholic to Protestant, or Protestant to Catholic, followed by persecutions and annoyances, and the Protestant Church divided into a number of sects and creeds which contended among themselves.

The Puritans, as a sect, were not popular in England; neither were the Quakers; and the Catholic and Episcopal Church alternated in control. The Puritans settled in the New England States, the Quakers in Pennsylvania, the Catholics largely in Maryland, and the Baptists and Presbyterians had strength in various colonies.

Catholic, Quaker, Presbyterian, Puritan, Episcopalian, and Jew united to overthrow the power of England, and under the leadership of Washington they secured their independence and established the new Republic.

They were devout men and women. They might all be called a religious people, for no matter to what sect they belonged, it will be remembered that during the trying days before the Declaration of Independence, they appointed a general day of fasting and prayer, hoping to influence the King and Parliament to grant them some reasonable consideration and a recognition of their natural rights.

But it will also be remembered that within a few days after this general day of prayer and fasting they proceeded to organize six companies of riflemen and a little later made George Washington the commander of their army.

This was typical of the first immigrants who came with a rifle in one hand and a Bible in the other.

The consolidation of the thirteen original Colonies into one Nation was a task not easy of accomplishment, and one of the difficulties was disagreement as to matters of creed.

These forefathers of ours, who suffered from intolerance in Europe, unfortunately brought with them in many cases feelings of resentment and intolerance of the religious beliefs of their neighbors. Men at that period believed that the greater the penalty the stronger was the deterrent power of the law, so that punishments for very small things were often excessive. And this was peculiarly true in relation to matters of creed.

COLONIAL CHURCH HISTORY.

John Fiske, the eminent historian, describes some of the difficulties of our forefathers and the separation of church and state as follows:

> By the revolutionary legislation of the States some progress was also effected in the direction of a more complete religious system. Pennsylvania and Delaware were the only States in which all Christian sects stood socially and politically on an equal footing. In Rhode Island all Protestants enjoyed equal privileges, but Catholics were debarred from voting. In Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Connecticut the old Puritan Congregationalism was the established religion. The Congregational Church was supported by taxes, and the minister once chosen kept his place for life unless formally investigated and dismissed by an ecclesiastical council. Laws against blasphemy, which were virtually laws against heresy, were in force in these three States.
> In Massachusetts Catholic priests were liable to imprisonment for life. Anyone who should dare to speculate too freely about the nature of Christ, or the philosophy of the plan of salvation, or to express a doubt as to the plenary inspiration of every word between the two covers of the Bible, was subject to fine and imprisonment. The tithing man still arrested Sabbath breakers and shut them up in the town cage in the market place; he stopped all unnecessary riding or driving on Sunday and haled people off to the meeting house, whether they would or not.
> Such restraints upon liberty were still endured by people who had dared and suffered so much for liberty's sake.
> The men of Boston strove hard to secure the repeal of these barbarous laws and the disestablishment of the Congregational Church; but they were outvoted by the delegates from the rural towns. The most that could be accomplished was the provision that dissenters might escape the church rate by supporting a church of their own.
> The nineteenth century was to arrive before church and state were finally separated in Massachusetts.
> The new constitution of New Hampshire was similarly illiberal, and in Connecticut no change was made.
> Rhode Island nobly distinguished herself by contrast when in 1784 she extended the franchise to Catholics. * * *
> As soon as the political separation from England was effected the Episcopal Church was accordingly separated from the State not only in South Carolina but in all the States in which it had hitherto been upheld by the authority of the British Government; and in the constitution of New Jersey, Georgia, and the two Carolinas no less than in those of Delaware and Pennsylvania, it was explicitly provided that no man should be obligated to pay any church rate or attend any religious service save according to his own free and unhampered will.

As emigration moved west of the Blue Ridge Mountains the liberal spirit and the demand for separation of church and state grew. This is described by Fiske:

So long as these frontier settlers served as a much-needed bulwark against the Indians, the church saw fit to ignore them and to let them build meeting houses and carry on religious services as they pleased. But when the peril of Indian attack had been thrust westward into the Ohio Valley, and these dissenting communities had waxed strong and prosperous, the ecclesiastical party in the State undertook to lay taxes on them for the support of the Church of England, and to compel them to receive Episcopal clergymen to preach for them, to bless them in marriage, and to bury their dead. The immediate consequence was a revolt which not only overthrew the established church in Virginia but nearly effected its ruin.

The trouble began in 1768, when the Baptists had made their way into the center of the State and three of their preachers were arrested by the sheriff of Spotsylvania. As the indictment was read against these men for preaching the gospel contrary to the law, a deep and solemn voice interrupted the proceedings.

Patrick Henry had to come on horseback many a mile over roughest roads to listen to the trial, and this phrase, which savored of the religious despotism of old, was quite too much for him.

"May it please your worships," he exclaimed, "what did I hear read? Did I hear an expression that these men, whom your worships are about to try for a misdemeanor, are charged with preaching the gospel of the Son of Man?"

The shamefaced silence and confusion which ensued was of ill omen for the success of an undertaking so unwelcome to the growing liberalism of the time.

* * * * * * *

By taking this broad ground they secured the powerful aid of Thomas Jefferson, and afterwards of Madison and Mason.

The controversy went on through all the years of the Revolutionary War, while all Virginia, from the sea to the mountains, rang with fulminations and argument.

In 1776 Jefferson and Mason succeeded in carrying a bill which released all dissenters from parish rates and legalized all forms of worship.

At last, in 1785, Madison won the crowning victory in the religious freedom act, by which the Church of England was disestablished and all parish rates abolished, and, still more, all religious tests were done away with.

Having briefly traced the character of the early Colonial settlers, disclosed the conflict of creeds which existed and the intolerance of the different sections, we have found that under the leadership of Jefferson the Colony of Virginia led the way in the separation of church and state and laid the foundation of religious freedom by its statute, which reads:

No man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, ministry, or place whatsoever, nor shall he be enforced, restrained, molested, or burdened in his body or goods, nor shall otherwise suffer on account of his religious opinions or belief, but all men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinion in matters of religion, and the same shall in no wise diminish, enlarge or affect their civil capacities.

But in all the colonies some champion of religious freedom made a successful fight prior to our Declaration of Independence.

It has been said medieval Europe was a time of intolerance and persecution, modern Europe a period of simple toleration, but it was the United States who first proclaimed religious liberty and equality.

It is true that in finally arriving at the American theory of religious freedom, the framers of our Constitution were confronted by a condition which demanded compromise and a uniform declaration to secure harmony and cordial interstate relations.

Roger Williams's adventures as a Protestant minister in various colonies and his ultimate triumph in Rhode Island, where he taught the widest respect for personal convictions in the matter of religion, gave to this colony the doctrine that everything depended upon the will of the majority, "but only in civil things," because with religious affairs "neither majorities nor magistrates had any concern."

Contemporaneously with what was happening in the Protestant colony of Rhode Island under the direction of Williams, was the reform directed by Lord Baltimore in the Catholic colony of Maryland. In this Catholic colony complete freedom of conscience was established, and Puritans and Episcopalians were alike made welcome.

European intolerance had bred some of its bitterness in the minds of the earlier colonists, and there may have been some excuse for it, but 200 years have passed with the principle clearly written in all our statutes, so there can be no excuse for its introduction now.

PLACED IN NATIONAL AND STATE CONSTITUTIONS.

Turning from the historian, we are fortunate in being able to quote America's greatest law writer, Judge Cooley:

The American people came to the work of framing their fundamental laws after centuries of religious oppression and persecution, sometimes by one party or sect and sometimes by another, had taught them the utter futility of all attempts to propagate religious opinions by the rewards, penalties, or terrors of human laws.

They could not fail to perceive, also, that a union of church and State, like that which existed in England, if not wholly impracticable in America, was certainly opposed to the spirit of our institutions, and that any domineering of one sect over another was repressing to the energies of the people and must necessarily tend to discontent and disorder.

Whatever, therefore, may have been their individual sentiments upon religious questions or upon the propriety of the State assuming supervision and control of religious affairs under other circumstances, the general voice has been that persons of every religious persuasion should be made equal before the law and that questions of religious belief and religious worship should be questions between each individual man and his Maker.

Finally, the compelling necessity for unity and a strong national government so controlled their minds that out of their convention came the Constitution of the United States—one of the greatest political productions of all history.

The ratification of the Constitution was a compromise. In fact, it was generally understood that it should be quickly amended, and shortly 10 amendments—sometimes called the Bill of Rights—were proposed by Congress and submitted to the various States for ratification.

And the first of these amendments reads as follows:

Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people to peaceably assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Following this national limitation, we find all of the State constitutions protect religious freedom against legislative interference, usually by providing that no law should control or interfere with the rights of conscience in matters of religion, and that the legislature shall appropriate no money for sectarian or denominational schools.

REYNOLDS AGAINST UNITED STATES.

This amendment has been interpreted by our Supreme Court in the case of Reynolds against United States, where we find an illuminative decision with a rich historical foundation. The court said:

Religious freedom is guaranteed everywhere throughout the United States, so far as congressional interference is concerned.

The question to be determined is, whether the law now under consideration comes within this prohibition.

The word "religion" is not defined in the Constitution. We must go elsewhere, therefore, to ascertain the meaning, and nowhere more appropriately, we think, than to the history of the times in the midst of which the provision was adopted.

The precise point of the inquiry is, What is the religious freedom which has been guaranteed?

Before the adoption of the Constitution attempts were made in some of the Colonies and States to legislate not only in respect to the establishment of religion but in respect to its doctrines and precepts as well.

The people were taxed, against their will, for the support of religion, and sometimes for the support of particular sects to whose tenets they could not and did not subscribe.

Punishments were prescribed for a failure to attend open public worship and sometimes for entertaining heretical opinions.

The controversy upon this general subject was animated in many of the States, but seemed at last to culminate in Virginia.

In 1784 the house of delegates of that State, having under consideration a bill establishing provision for teachers of the Christian religion, postponed it until the next session and directed that the bill should be published and distributed and that the people be requested to signify their opinion respecting the adoption of such a bill at the next session of assembly.

This brought out a determined opposition. Amongst others, Mr. Madison prepared a memorial and remonstrance, which was widely circulated and signed, and in which he demonstrated that religion, or the duty we owe the Creator, was not within the cognizance of civil government.

At the next session the proposed bill was not only defeated, but another for establishing religious freedom, drafted by Thomas Jefferson, was passed. In the preamble of this act religious freedom is defined, and, after a recital, "that to suffer the civil magistrate to intrude his powers into the field of opinion and to restrain the profession or propagation of principles on supposition of their ill tendency, is a dangerous fallacy, which at once destroys all religious liberty. It is declared that it is time enough for the rightful purpose of civil government for its officers to interfere when principles break out into overt acts against peace and good order."

In these two sentences is found the true distinction between what properly belongs to the church and what to the State.

In a little more than a year after the passage of this statute, the convention met which prepared the Constitution of the United States. Of this convention Mr. Jefferson was not a member, he being then absent as minister to France. As soon as he saw the draft of the Constitution proposed for adoption, he, in a letter to a friend, expressed his disappointment at the absence of an express declaration insuring the freedom of religion, but was willing to accept it as it was, trusting that the good sense and honest intentions of the people would bring about the necessary alterations.

Five of the States, while adopting the Constitution, proposed amendments. Three, New Hampshire, New York, and Virginia, included in one form or another a declaration of religious freedom in the changes they desired to have made, as did also North Carolina, where the convention at first declined to ratify the Constitution until the proposed amendments were acted upon.

Accordingly, at the first session of the First Congress, the amendment now under consideration was proposed with others by Mr. Madison.

It met the views of the advocates of religious freedom, and was adopted.

Mr. Jefferson afterwards, in reply to an address to him by a committee, took occasion to say:

"Believing with you that religion is a matter which lies solely between a man and his God; that he owes account to none other for his faith or his worship; that the legislative powers of the Government reach actions only and not opinions, I contemplate with sovereign reverence that the act of the whole American people which declared that their legislatures should make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, thus building a wall of separation between church and state. Adhering to this expression of the supreme will of the Nation in behalf of the rights of conscience, I shall seek, with sincere satisfaction, the progress of those sentiments which tend to restore man to all his natural rights, convinced he has no natural right in opposition to his social duties."

Coming as this does from an acknowledged leader of the advocates of the measure, it may be accepted almost as an authoritative declaration of the scope and effect of the amendment thus secured.

Congress was deprived of all legislative power over mere opinion, but was left free to reach actions which were in violation of social duties or subversive of good order.

JUDGE COOLEY'S INTERPRETATION.

Judge Cooley has made the following classification of those things which are not lawful under any of the American constitutions:

1. The legislatures have not been left at liberty to effect a union of church and state, or to establish preferences by law in favor of any one religious persuasion or mode of worship.

There is not complete religious liberty where any one sect is favored by the State and given an advantage by law over other sects. Whatever establishes a distinction against one class or sect is, to the extent to which the distinction operates unfavorably, a persecution, and, if based on religious grounds, a religious persecution. The extent of the discrimination is not material to the principle; it is enough that it creates an inequality of right or principle.

2. Not only is no one denomination to be favored at the expense of the rest, but all support of religious instruction must be entirely voluntary. It is not within the sphere of government to coerce it.

3. Whoever is not led by choice or a sense of duty to attend upon the ordinances of religion is not to be compelled to do so by the State. It is the province of the State to enforce, so far it may be found practicable, the obligations and duties which the citizen may be under or may owe to his fellow citizens or to society, but those which spring from the relations between himself and his Maker are to be enforced by the admonitions of the conscience and not by the penalties of human laws. Indeed, as all real worship must essentially and necessarily consist in the free-will offering of adoration and gratitude by the creature to the Creator, human laws are obviously inadequate to incite or compel those internal and voluntary emotions which shall include it, and human penalties at most could only enforce the observance of idle ceremonies, which, when unwillingly performed, are alike valueless to the participants and devoid of all the elements of true worship.

4. No external authority is to place itself between the finite being and the infinite when the former is seeking to render the homage that is due, and in a mode which commends itself to his conscience and judgment as being suitable for him to render, and acceptable to its object.

5. An earnest believer usually regards it as his duty to propagate his opinions and to bring others to his views. To deprive him of this right is to take from him the power to perform what he considers a most sacred obligation.

These are the prohibitions which in some form of words are to be found in the American constitutions and which secure freedom of conscience and of religious worship. No man in religious matters is to be subjected to the censorship of the State or of any public authority, and the State is not to inquire into or take notice of religious belief when the citizen performs his duty to the State and to his fellows and is guilty of no breach of public morals or public decorum.

INTOLERANCE.

Liberty, civil or religious, can not exist with religious intolerance. If liberty is preserved, intolerance must be eliminated.

Destiny has reserved for our Nation the duty of securing liberty without license for each citizen and by its example to spread this liberty throughout the world.

A people so persevering in its fight for civil liberty should never pause or hesitate in its opposition to religious intolerance.

While the fundamental principle of a democracy is the rule of the majority, this must carry with it not only recognition, but respect for the rights of the minority.

If for no higher motive than the fear of retaliation, we must constantly remember that a majority to-day may be a minority to-morrow, and a persecuted minority may become an intolerant majority inflicting its unlicensed will upon its former adversary.

It becomes the particular duty of those in a majority to insist upon the preservation of the rights of the minority, and the fight against religious intolerance should be made by the Protestant for the Catholic and by the Catholic for the Protestant, and, because of numerical weakness, of both Protestant and Catholic for the religious rights of the Jew.

At this time real Americans must press forward a consideration of the fundamentals upon which our Government is based, and not permit the passing and changing issues of the hour to obscure in our minds the necessity of preserving the broad principles which form the safe foundation of our civil and religious rights.

The subtle breath of the demagogue is one of the ever-present dangers of a democracy. He can fan into flame religious and racial prejudice which may bring a conflagration which destroys the best we have in life and liberty.

Macaulay describes a speech made by a Mr. Warburton in the House of Commons of England in 1833 upon removing certain civil disabilities suffered by members of the Jewish religion. He said:

If England were now invaded by Roman Catholics, how many English Roman Catholics would go over to the invader? If France were now attacked by a Protestant enemy, how many French Protestants would lend him help? Why not try what effect would be produced on the Jew by that tolerant policy which made the English Roman Catholic a good Englishman and the French Calvinist a good Frenchman?

He concluded his appeal by an attack upon intolerance and proclaimed the triumph of the Christian religion over the nations of the earth, despite the power of intolerance supported by the armies and the wealth of the then known world:

I should think that I insulted that religion (Christian) if I said that it can not stand unaided by intolerant laws. Without such laws it was established, and without such laws it may be maintained.

It triumphed over the superstitions of the most refined and of the most savage nations, over the graceful mythology of Greece and the bloody idolatry of the northern forests. It prevailed over the power and policy of the Roman Empire. It tamed the barbarians by whom that Empire was overthrown. But all these victories were gained, not by the help of intolerance, but in spite of the opposition of intolerance.

The whole history of Christianity proves that she has little indeed to fear from persecution as a foe, but much to fear from persecution as an ally.

May she long continue to bless our country with her benignant influence, strong in her sublime philosophy, strong in her spotless morality, strong in those internal and external evidences to which the most powerful and comprehensive of human intellects have yielded assent, the last solace of those who have outlived every earthly hope, the last restraint of those who are raised above every earthly fear!

But let not us, mistaking her character and her interests, fight the battle of truth with the weapons of error, and endeavor to support by oppression that religion which first taught the human race the great lesson of universal charity.

The American Catholic, the American Protestant, and the American Jew must stand united in firm opposition to any intolerant movement which deprives any creed of the fullest freedom and equal rights under the law, or curtails personal liberty of conscience or religion.

Merger of Street Car Lines, District of Columbia.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARRY C. GAHN,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 10, 1921,

On the bill (H. R. 8520) to regulate public service corporations operating within the District of Columbia.

Mr. GAHN. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on the District of Columbia has indicated by its arguments on this bill that Members have approached a difficult subject with tireless energy, and in opposing the bill I do so without any reflection on the work of that committee or any of its members.

However, we must look at the results of the bill rather than its intentions. The bill intends to merge the various street railway companies operating street cars within the District of Columbia, and it is argued that such merger would result in benefiting the car riders by a lower rate of fare. But such might not, and probably would not, be the result.

If the bill had to deal with a merger alone, there would be no objection to it. It does not compel a merger of the street railway systems, but as an inducement to the merger it relieves them from certain taxes heretofore and now being levied on the gross receipts of the companies. This relief is specifically provided for in section 5 of the bill, and this section goes into effect whether there is a merger or not. In other words, it is attempting to persuade the companies to merge and consolidate, but at the same time provides that they can be given the tax relief and other gratuities whether or not they merge and consolidate.

Such tactics have been known to be used many times where railway and railroad companies negotiate with legislative bodies for giving up something to which they claim under law for an unenforced plan for them to do something in return for favors granted in the new law. Performance is rare. This House must not and will not lend itself to any such procedure. If the bill passes at all, it should be so amended as to make the tax reliefs effective only when the merger is made and the other requirements are complied with, and not until then.

Even so, I believe it is bad policy to enact laws governing public-service corporations without specifying what they are to do and what they are not to do, and reserving full power and authority to govern their actions.

In section 5 it is provided that in lieu of the reduction in taxes and payments, the United States shall be given 50 per cent in excess of the 7 per cent return paid to the combined stockholders of the railroad company, based upon a fair value to be fixed by appraisal. A close study of the bill and similar situations in other cities will disclose that there never was a time where there was any such excess to be paid into the governmental Treasury.

Besides, the Public Service Commission of the District has full power and authority to fix rates of fare, and such rates should be based upon the actual cost of service, and if the cost of service would bring in a net income over and above the 7 per cent, that surplus should go toward the reduction of fares so that the car riders, who pay the bills, would be given the benefit.

It is stated that the Washington Co. would go bankrupt if the present rate of fare were decreased, whereas at the present rate the Capital Co. is making anywhere from 10 to 12 per cent. It is thus apparent that the present rate of fare in the District is too high, and the only excuse is that one company can not run its lines on a less rate of fare.

If a merger is the solution of this gigantic problem, what is to prohibit Congress forcing a merger without putting in this bill all the recompenses which it does?

Members of the committee asked some one to suggest some other remedy for the situation if this bill fails. My own experience in the city of Cleveland leads me to believe that the best method of operating a street railway system is one based upon service at cost, owned by a private company but controlled by the municipality or governmental body. If every Member of Congress had the same idea, there would be nothing to prevent a consolidation of the lines in Washington by condemnation and appropriation proceedings and the operation on such plan or a lease system with the right of control reserved.

If the United States Government is big and capable enough to efficiently manage and control its great departments, handling millions and even billions of dollars, it certainly is efficient enough to operate or control a comparatively small street car system in this city. If this bill is defeated, I urge the committee to work upon some such line of attack.

Back to the States and Back to the Constitution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN J. McSWAIN,

OF SOUTH CAROLINA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 1, 1921,

On the conference report on Senate bill 1072, and under general leave to extend remarks Mr. McSWAIN submitted the following:

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted to extend my remarks, I will discuss what we find here described as "the unwarranted usurpation of Federal power" and "the dangerous aggression upon the reserved rights of the States." The thought is latent in the minds of many speakers that the tendency toward centralization of power in the Federal agencies is not only unauthorized either by the letter or the spirit of the Constitution, but is dangerous and impolitic. It is but natural that, during my first term as a Member of Congress, I should be struck by the general distaste for constitutional questions. The man who raises the objection that the exercise of a power or the appropriation of money sought at the hands of the Federal Government is unconstitutional is respectfully and punctually marked down as a "back number." Having been reared and taught in the school of State rights, I took somewhat seriously the obligation to "support and defend the Constitution without mental reservation and without any purpose of evasion," at the time that I took the oath of office. I remembered that the ninth and tenth articles of amendment to the Constitution are still a part of the Constitution, and I can not get it out of my system that we must look to the Constitution itself for either expressed or implied authority for every act of legislation or appropriation under consideration.

While I am fully aware that the progress and development of nations is not determined by logic, and while I realize there is a sort of intangible social drift, the resultant of all individual thought, feelings, and actions, yet I feel constantly confronted with this proposition: If it is desirable for the well-being of the Nation that the Federal Government shall exercise some power, neither expressly nor impliedly conferred by the Constitution under our oaths, then it is our duty to inaugurate steps for the amendment of the Constitution conferring the power desired.

When our Nation started out upon her marvelous and successful course after independence, we can ascertain from history that the thought of the people were turned to the several States for any legal relief desired. Gradually the Federal Government grew in power and importance until now it seems that most men impulsively and instinctively think first to the Federal Government in connection with any governmental action desired. It is important to inquire the cause of this change of attitude. I offer one explanation as follows: Based upon the subconscious premise that the greater includes the less, the citizen naturally concludes that since the Federal Government exercises constitutionally the most conspicuous powers of sovereignty, such as war, finance, interstate and international commerce, then surely the same Government can exercise any other governmental power of less importance. It is not an unnatural thought for people to say, "If 'Uncle Sam' can draft and send our boys over 3,000 miles across the ocean to fight and die on foreign soil, then why can not the same power control all the less important activities of his life from birth, even prior to birth, through school and through all the vicissitudes of domestic, commercial, and economic life?"

It may be also noted that the facility of communication between States by means of railroads, telegraphs, telephone, and automobiles has caused State lines to become more and more obscure. To-day we find the Federal Government, through the Interstate Commerce Commission, fixing the rates for freight and passenger service upon business exclusively within the States. While the constitutionality of such Federal action is still before the courts, and while I confidently believe that the courts will deny its constitutionality, yet I have been impressed by the fact that many newspaper editorials have boldly and bluntly advanced the proposition that State action in regard to such railroad rates can no longer be tolerated. To-day we find many schools of propagandists seeking the cure of thousands of social ills by means of Federal agencies and the propagandists confidently say that there is constitutional warrant for their proposed action, because "general welfare" will be promoted by such action. If the "general welfare clause" can be properly and legally invoked as a justification for congressional action outside of the specific grant of powers under the Constitution, then no limit can be set to the Federal power, because the judgment of Congress as to what will promote the general welfare can not be reviewed in any court and any legislation which Congress labels, "for the promotion of the general welfare," will stand.

Mr. Speaker, why has the relative importance of the States dwindled? Why is it that in our early history to be the governor of a State was as great an honor as to be President of the Federation? I think the first cause worthy of mention is financial. The States have always relied solely upon direct taxes for their support, and therefore the more activities the State as such engaged in the more taxes the people paid. But, on the contrary, until very recent years the Federal Government has depended almost exclusively upon indirect taxes, so that the masses never realized what the Federal Government was costing them. Therefore there has grown up a sort of sentiment among the people that if they can get money from Washington they are getting free money. If Congress pays out money by appropriation it does not hurt their pockets like appropriation by State legislatures. Therefore the vast financial resources of the Federal Government that sprang up as if by magic operated as a powerful attraction for the attention of the people. There was a sort of centripetal force concentrating in Washington. State legislatures were niggardly toward State activities because the people complained of taxation. Congress was generous and free with Federal money because the money seemed to spring up from a great fountain, and certainly the money was extracted from the people by the "painless process."

Mr. Speaker, I feel it my duty to say modestly, as becometh a new Member, that there is danger in the continuance of the tendency to centralize power in the Federal Government. First, the mere fact that the Constitution is ignored, in violation of the oath, is dangerous, and that the courts must resort to ingenious and far-fetched arguments to sustain Federal legislation—because popular sentiment seems to justify such legislation—is dangerous. We all ought to be clear enough in our convictions to say that before we will undertake the exercise of power, however desirable it may be, we will insist upon an amendment to the Constitution that would bring the issue squarely before the people. In this connection I am curious to inquire how many would support an amendment to the Constitution to the effect that Congress shall have power to enact any legislation which "it may deem necessary and proper to the general welfare." I doubt if such a proposition would find a single supporter in this body.

The next source of danger from the centralization tendency grows out of the inefficiency, the autocracy, and the extravagance of bureaucratic establishments. Our country is so vast in area, in population, and in wealth that these mighty bureaus are necessarily incidental to the effort to exercise so many governmental powers from a common center. How much more efficient, how much more responsive to the popular will, how much more economical are the corresponding departments in our State capitals? In the next place, we must expect that under a centralized Government Federal executives will become defiant of public feeling and sentiment. The reason is that under the Constitution all Federal executive offices from the highest to the lowest, with the exception of the President, are appointed by the President himself. Under State governments the people elect their officers from the township commissioners up through the county sheriffs and clerks to all the various State officers, and thus the executives are always responsive to the popular will. Another very important objection is that if practically all governmental power was exercised from Washington, then the problem of respecting the rights of the minority is difficult to the point of impossibility. With such a vast area the minority group is multiplied, and when the country as a whole is considered as the unit the minority may often constitute all the people grouped in a particular section or sections. While it is fundamental to republican institutions that the majority shall rule, yet it is also essential to the stability of republican institutions that the rights of minorities shall be respected. If all of our governmental powers except those specifically mentioned in the Constitution and the amendments were scrupulously confined to State action, then the smaller minority groups within the States could be better accommodated and there would be no cooperation between minority groups in different parts of the country and Government as a whole would be more stable and secure. To make myself plain, when minorities are resisting the aggression of majorities exercising nation-wide power, then the minorities throughout all parts of the Nation will organize and cooperate, and thus there will be organized on a nation-wide basis "blocs," insurgents and the disgruntled who may any time become anarchists and rebels.

But if, on the contrary, those governmental powers so intimately affecting the social and economic life of the people, such as domestic relations, contractual relations, service relations, and all those relations out of which grow strong feeling and intense conviction, were exercised by 48 different States, then we might expect variety of action by the States, and there would be neither reason nor cause for conference and cooperation between the minority groups within the different States, and we might reasonably expect and would surely find greater harmony and domestic tranquillity throughout the entire country.

I believe it is high time that there should be a reaction in the tendency toward concentration of governmental activities in Washington. I believe there are good reasons for promoting a campaign based upon the slogan, "Back to the States and to the Constitution." I believe such a reversal of policy would have the beneficial effect of keeping the Government close to the people. As we believe in democratic institutions, as we have faith in the wisdom and fairness of a republican form of government, so we must seek to keep the Government pure and strong by keeping it close to the people, the source of all power. I believe that the people would be less burdened by taxes, because I believe that the States can and will more economically administer governmental power. I believe the aggregate of all the activities by 48 States would be far less expensive than the cost of the same activities proceeding from Washington as a common center. I believe that such a reversal would insure the benefits and blessings of local self-government. I believe that such local self-government would greatly lift the standard of citizenship through the Nation. It is easy to argue that the Federal Government can reach down and lift the people up, but if you analyze the proposition you must acknowledge that the Federal Government is but the people themselves. Can we in Washington claim greater intelligence or virtue or patriotism than the governors and members of legislatures of our several States? Who have elected us and conferred a brief authority upon us save the very people who elect a governor and the members of the State legislatures? "Upon what meat have we fed that we have grown so great" as to have power to reach down and to lift up the very people who have lifted us up?

Mr. Speaker, I believe in republican institutions because I believe in the people. I know that progress and development in a republic is slower than in an autocracy led by a wise and good autocrat. But I realize that no nation can have any assurance that it will have an unbroken line of succession of good autocrats, and all history enjoins us to put our faith in the aggregate judgment and action of the people. Therefore I regard republican institutions as a school for citizenship. The generations that have gone made their mistakes, but they also worked out the solution of many problems, and we are blessed and benefited by their wisdom and we may avoid their mistakes. We of this generation are doing our bit to solve the problems on our hands, but we know that we will make many mistakes. We confidently believe that the generation that shall follow us will be wiser and better than ourselves and that our children will "rise on stepping stones of our dead selves to higher things." Therefore though the progress and development in many lines may be slow, and though it may seem like a backward step, if we decentralize bureaucratic power that has grown up in Washington, when the future historian shall make his estimate of the forces that have operated to make us a people not only great and powerful but, we think modestly, good and brave, such historian will find that the reservation of power to the States and exercise of power by the people through their several State agencies will have been one of the mightiest factors in perpetuating our national life.

Impatience is often a national as well as personal fault. We are unwilling to work, wait, and pray and see "freedom broaden slowly down from precedent to precedent." We insist upon quick results and too often ignore the means of securing an end. We have too much faith in mere legislation and not enough in ourselves. We are enmeshed in a mass of statutory laws. "Back to the States and back to the Constitution" means really back to the people, and is the signboard on the highway to permanent and peaceful national life.

Disposition of Surplus Property.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARENCE MacGREGOR,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 1, 1921,

On the bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads."

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the legislation upon several grounds. It is another step in pushing us toward despotism. I remember very distinctly hearing Elihu Root make the statement at least 10 years ago that the grave danger to the stability of our Government was in making it "heavy at the top." We are repeatedly passing legislation vesting authority in State matters in the hands of Federal authorities. We are creating a bureaucratic Government that can not but end in disaster.

I desire to call attention to another feature of the bill that is obnoxious, and that is section 5, which directs the Secretary of War to turn over to the Secretary of Agriculture—all war material, equipment, and supplies now or hereafter declared surplus from stock now on hand and not needed for the purposes of the War Department, but suitable for use in the improvement of highways.

Thus no discretion is left to the Secretary of War. The doors are wide open for the further throwing away of war supplies that we have on hand. The people must be prepared for another orgy of waste. The War Department has nearly $4,000,000,000 worth of personal property on hand. A large part of this consists of articles and material that should be sold and the proceeds put into the Federal Treasury to relieve the burden of taxation.

The departments of the Government have already had too much of the property.

Take a look at the last statement as to distribution of property to the various departments of the Government:

OCTOBER 24, 1921.

Subject: Surplus war stocks transferred to other governmental departments by the War Department.

The War Department authorizes publication of the following statement from the Office of the Director of Sales.

The Director of Sales announces that Army surplus material costing the United States Government $209,620,147 had been transferred to other governmental departments on September 30, 1921. The transfers were made through the Transfer and Inventory Section, Office of the Director of Sales.

Of this amount nearly 66 per cent, or $138,290,529, was transferred to the Department of Agriculture, all but $10,619 of which was without funds.

The Navy Department and the Marine Corps received $25,653,369 worth of material. Other departments and bureaus made requisitions from War Department surplus as follows:

Post Office	$16,261,829
Interior	15,407,361
Treasury	10,294,557
Commerce	3,470,823

The people of the country have little realization of the waste, and this Congress is not doing its duty toward the people in further permitting this raid upon the Public Treasury without appropriation.

It has been proclaimed that we can not give adjusted compensation to the service men, but at the same time we are willing to let our property be thrown away or dissipated.

There is sufficient salvage value in the surplus property to take care of a large portion of the cost of the bonus.

We seem to be very willing to give away our property to the people of Europe or allow it to go to waste, but very unwilling to render justice to our own boys.

The surplus property division has done well in securing a good price for property sold. The last report shows:

Sales	$838,618,109.58
Cost	1,502,326,598.79

Let us exercise some degree of diligence in making good our own pretensions of economy and by so doing make it possible to make good to the boys who fought the fight.

Secretary Hoover is credited with the statement that millions of dollars' worth of unsold war supplies should be given to Russia, because they can not be sold for more than 10 cents on the dollar. I appreciate that Mr. Hoover is a great man; his knowledge of world conditions is far more extended than mine, but I must take issue upon this subject.

I believe that it is essential for the restoration of healthful business conditions in the world that Russia should be rehabilitated; the condition of the Russian people is horrible beyond comprehension; I will contemplate with great gratification the American people giving to the limit to relieve the distress of those people, but I believe the time has come for the American Government to cease making donations until we have done justice to our boys who went across the seas to fight and who are now being cared for in an inadequate manner by the Government.

I believe also that rather than make further donations to other countries we should make a rapid disposition of the surplus and devote the proceeds to the payment of an adjusted compensation to all of the boys.

We have heard much about the financial havoc that would be wrought by making present provision for a bonus to the ex-service men, but I am quite convinced that a scheme for the utilization of funds derived from the sale of a large portion of this property could be worked out that would not interfere greatly with the finances of the country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FINIS J. GARRETT,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 1, 1921.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me, I will print an article prepared by Hon. Cordell Hull, our former colleague, upon the economic phases of the failure of the peace treaty.

The article is as follows:

ECONOMIC CONSEQUENCES OF THE DEFEAT OF THE PEACE TREATY.

(By Cordell Hull, ex-Representative in Congress, author of the income tax and Federal inheritance tax laws, the measure to stabilize the value of Liberty bonds, etc.)

The great World War will afford a fruitful topic of discussion through all time. The immediate appraisement of the policies pursued by peoples and Governments in dealing with the post-war problems of reconstruction, however, has become a matter of pressing importance, in view of the extremely unsatisfactory nature of the recent and present world political, financial, and economic conditions. The masses in many neutral countries and in those countries participating in the war which were helped economically more than they were hurt as a net result are daily seeking the causes of the great and sudden transition from a condition of general prosperity at the time the armistice was signed to one of industrial depression and paralysis 18 months to 3 years later. This state of anxious inquiry exists throughout America to-day.

What were the principal underlying causes of the great business depression, far more destructive than any of the past, which now grips the world as in a vice?

Whose was the responsibility for this awful catastrophe, which entailed losses only secondary to those of the World War itself?

Would the pursuit of wiser methods and sounder policies since the armistice have avoided the world economic collapse and its chief effects?

One great truth proven by all human experience is that at the conclusion of any important war the nations engaged have found it imperatively necessary to establish conditions of peace as the first vital step toward the restoration of normal political and economic conditions. What, then, were the economic consequences of the refusal of the United States Government to agree to peace terms during 1919, and thereby to contribute its fair share of moral and economic cooperation toward the early establishment of domestic and world conditions of peace? Facts and developments to date clearly reveal the hostile conduct and attitude of America toward present and permanent peace, and hence toward any kind of international cooperation during the past two and one-half years, as offering the principal underlying cause of the economic plight in which this country now finds itself.

VALUES DECLINE $40,000,000,000.

The most ignorant person will recall with certainty that following the armistice and until after the defeat of the Versailles treaty leading American bankers, business men, and economists everywhere directed attention to the great actual and potential supplies of foodstuffs, raw materials, and manufactures in the United States, to their extreme scarcity in other countries, to the demand that would be made on American industry for an indefinite time to aid in the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Europe, to the dire need of that part of the world for all the products and services America could spare; and those noted economic authorities unqualifiedly predicted and proclaimed a period of uninterrupted and unparalleled prosperity for the American people. It was only after the defeat of the treaty, and Europe as a result was seen to be slipping further toward political and economic disaster, that these men hurriedly modified their views.

Every person now knows that during past months the value of farm products suffered a sudden and violent slump of 60 per cent; that near 6,000,000 persons are out of employment, and that many more will be in a similar plight by March, 1922; that our foreign trade has declined $4,500,000,000 during the first eight months of 1921; that our great merchant marine is idle; that the number of commercial failures is vastly increasing over those of past years; that factories and mines are largely shut down or running on partial time; that a slump in commodity and security values of near $40,000,000,000 has been experienced; and that in brief the Nation has suffered losses from the present industrial panic as great as those of any other three panics in its entire history. The average American citizen knows and feels the effects of these physical facts and conditions, whatever he may read or hear to the contrary.

NO DISCUSSION OF ECONOMIC PHASE.

The singular fact will be recalled that the opponents of treaty ratification, instead of considering the effects of treaty failure upon the future course of economic conditions, so vital to the welfare of the masses, avoided any discussion of that phase. In pitching their fight on racial and religious grounds and prejudices, and on the doctrine of "political isolation," they found themselves obliged in order to carry out their controlling purpose of defeating the treaty at all hazards to couple the doctrine of "economic isolation" with that of "political isolation."

Republican leaders were thus enabled to ignore the vital problem of the economic welfare of every American citizen and to dismiss the subject by proclaiming the false doctrine that America's sole concern was for her home industry and domestic commerce, and that her people could best live and prosper within and among themselves. They waived aside the subject of our foreign finance and commerce with a contemptuous gesture and impatiently inquired, "What cares America for foreign trade relations, or any other kind of foreign relations?" American business facts and conditions now can no longer be ignored.

The average citizen at present demands to know how the peace treaty opponents could see so clearly ahead the specter of domination by the Pope, by the black and yellow races, and by the mysterious "world supergovernment," in the event of treaty ratification, but could not see ahead the awful precipice, plainly visible, over which the Nation must plunge into world panic in the event of treaty rejection. Blind refusal, produced by political and personal hate, will be the sole explanation offered by the impartial historian of the future.

RECONSTRUCTION POLICIES CONTRASTED.

It is extremely interesting to contrast the readjustment methods and policies pursued by the United States and other nations following the defeat of the peace treaty—which led straight to industrial disaster—with those other and different methods and policies of reconstruction which the friends of early treaty ratification strongly favored. In the light of such comparison and contrast the average citizen will best be able to judge whether the adoption of the latter readjustment policies would have safeguarded the Nation against the existing panic conditions chiefly created by the former.

What was the position of the American Nation in the middle of 1919, near which time the treaty, at all hazards, should have been ratified? We had 105,000,000 population; national wealth of $275,000,000,000; an internal commerce of more than $75,000,000,000; $3,079,000,000 of gold, or one-third of the world supply; a foreign commerce of $10,300,000,000, of which $5,000,000,000 was with Europe; a favorable foreign trade balance of $4,000,000,000; a great merchant marine; a foreign debt in our favor of more than $11,000,000,000. We furnished the world the chief supply of foodstuffs and raw materials. We had unsurpassed productive power in agriculture, minerals, forests, and manufactures. Our annual savings exceeded $15,000,000,000. We were a great creditor Nation—the world's banker.

UNITED STATES AS LEADER OF THE WORLD.

The United States had become the recognized leader of the world, politically, financially, commercially, industrially, and morally. Her credit and financial structure was sound and secure. Prosperity existed among every class of persons and of business. There was a market for every product and a job for every person. The world was prosperous in 1919. This Nation's productive capacity instead of being impaired as a result of the war, had expanded from $35,000,000,000 in 1913 until the annual commodity output exceeded domestic necessity by 15 or 20 per cent. We had no inflation of currency and no seriously hurtful inflation of credit. Our commodity price level was near the world price level as fixed not by inflated currency values but rather by the great war demand for commodity supplies. The Government met one-third of its expenditures during the war from taxes levied mainly on war profits. The war cost had not made a dent in our economic situation.

Our postwar problems of readjustment were fewer and far less grave than those of other countries. We had the task during 1919 of demobilizing our Army and fitting the men back in civil employment, which was admirably performed. Other problems were the repeal of war legislation and the removal of war regulations and restrictions from business, the contraction of credit inflation, the curbing of profiteering so as to lessen the high cost of living, the prevention of wild speculation, gradual and cautious deflation of prices over a period of years as the world production increased, disarmament and reduction and readjustment of war taxes, and the maintenance of our foreign trade, so as to continue the full activities of American industry and the regular employment of American labor. This last and biggest question of keeping open our foreign markets was irrepressible.

RECONSTRUCTION PROBLEMS OF EUROPE.

What were the reconstruction conditions and problems of other parts of the world in the middle of 1919? Europe emerged from the war with a total loss of men aggregating over 9,000,000, not including double that number of cripples and maimed survivors. The war cost approached $175,000,000,000, not to mention the vast destruction of physical properties, which in France alone was estimated at $13,000,000,000. The gold standard had been supplanted by paper currencies throughout Europe. Immense credit inflation existed. A mountain of war debt had been piled up. Europe's wealth had been greatly depleted and her current production severely curtailed. She was without food or raw materials. The adverse exchange situation was growing serious. Available capital was at a low ebb. Trade and financial relations between the various European States had been severed. There were many unstable de facto and other governments recently created by the 50,000,000 people newly liberated by the war and the Versailles treaty. Serious boundary disputes were brewing in different localities. Europe was torn widely apart with respect to commerce, finance, and communication. A number of old Governments had been destroyed, while some surviving ones lay prostrate. Finance, commerce, and industry in central and eastern Europe was almost at a standstill, and all Europe was thereby threatened with great political and economic instability. She was still an armed camp, the treaty delay not having yet permitted the disbandment of her armies and the return of the soldiers to industrial pursuits. Disease was inflicting serious losses among many peoples.

It is most important at every stage after 1918 to keep an eye on the new an old nations of central and eastern Europe, such as Austria, Hungary, Jugoslavia, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Serbia, Esthonia, Lithuania, Latvia, Finland, not to mention Germany, Albania, and Montenegro, in which the greatest political and economic demoralization existed and which then and thereafter called loudest for outside assistance.

THE "WORLD'S SORE SPOT."

Unstable governments, economic prostration, and poverty pervaded Austria, Poland, Hungary, Rumania, Czechoslovakia, Ukraine, Serbia, Finland, and all the other States in the great belt lying between the Baltic and the Black Seas. Here was the world's sore spot. England, France, Italy, Belgium, and the neutral countries of Europe were still in a position gradually to work their own way back to normal conditions, unless they should be held back and drawn into the vortex of bankruptcy by the weak and exhausted neighboring States of Europe.

The first essentials of European recovery were the stabilization of government, increased production, cessation of government borrowing, and decreased expenditures both by the government and by each individual citizen.

There is no more outstanding fact of the war than that in 1919 it was most urgently necessary that the strong nations should speedily lend moral and economic cooperation both to the old and new tottering Governments in Europe to help them to become secure and stable. Without political stability there could be no economic stability in those war-torn countries, and hence no starting up of production.

THE MEANING OF RATIFICATION.

It is thus seen that Europe's problems of reconstruction and rehabilitation of 1919 were huge and complicated. At this desperate stage she looked to the Versailles treaty as her chart and to America as the world leader. Treaty ratification would mean early peace and the disbandment of armies, the restoration of mutual confidence and good will among many peoples suspicious or hostile toward each other, a definite, fixed, workable program of readjustment and reorganization by which every people could be guided with system and certainty. Ratification would mean clearly defined boundary lines, the permanent creation of new nations, provision for fixing the German indemnity, international disarmament, and, in brief, a gradual and general transformation from war to peace conditions, politically, financially, commercially, and industrially.

Europe stood at the forks of the road in the middle of 1919; one led to nonproduction, idleness, starvation, disease, new wars, and governmental and business chaos, while the other led to conditions of peace, general employment, rapid production, stable government, certain financial and commercial recovery. It was later to be seen how certain Republican politicians by their narrow, selfish, and short-sighted partisan policies were destined to send Europe headlong down the wrong road.

PRODUCTION AND CREDITS ONLY SALVATION.

The fact was generally recognized early in 1919 that if she was to save herself all Europe must promptly go to work and catch up with production. This course would allay unrest, discourage bolshevism and disorder, and create a basis for sound business finance and credit at home and abroad. Foodstuffs and raw materials, however, were indispensible to this general undertaking. The United States held the chief available supply of each. The more enfeebled States of Europe, having neither cash nor commodities with which to buy from us must secure credit from the stronger nations before they would be able to make any appreciable recovery.

The great economic organization of Europe, though badly dislocated, was still functioning and capable of unlimited production. Ample skilled labor was everywhere available. The power of a country to recuperate from the waste and devastation of war is phenomenal, if only the processes of production can be kept constantly active. In the light of all post-war experience of the past Europe, as viewed from the middle of 1919, if given outside cooperation and encouragement at all reasonable, could undoubtedly make a satisfactory return toward normal within a surprisingly short period. Would some friendly or creditor nations, even in their own enlightened self-interest, lend a helping hand? If so, Europe's other problems, such as deflation of currency, credit and prices, the balancing of budgets, support of the foreign exchange and credit situation, would be greatly simplified. Suitable aid could not be delayed if this herculean task was to be successfully accomplished. Europe must at once move forward or backward.

Does any intelligent person doubt that the United States, England, France, Spain, Japan, Holland, and the Scandinavian countries could, without serious burden but in the end with great profit, have cooperated together in the furnishing of the necessary credit aid to those war-stricken countries of central and eastern Europe, thereby assuring their gradual economic rehabilitation? For these stronger nations thus to fail in such world crisis would mean certain industrial disaster in Europe and most destructive reactionary effects, such as we now see, upon all other countries.

What happened at this pressing juncture? In the summer of 1919, Europe and the world stood aghast when they suddenly learned that America, to whose leadership all the nations had turned, was in the act of rejecting the treaty providing for world peace, abandoning practically all associations and relations with other countries, and pursuing a strict policy of political and commercial isolation. As this unbelievable possibility at first, gradually became a positive reality—as the United States deserted her proud place at the head of the column of all the nations of the earth—struggling as they were to preserve civilization, to reestablish stable government and to restore economic order from economic chaos, and skulked away, the war-weary peoples everywhere gave way to despair. The peace, the civilization, and the economic rehabilitation of the world must be subordinated to narrow, selfish, sordid, vicious politics in America.

CONSEQUENCES OF AMERICA'S POLICY OF ISOLATION.

What were some of the unspeakable consequences of this American political policy of "isolation" and of throttling world peace? Europe without leadership, with the program of world peace hopelessly handicapped, helpless, not knowing which way to turn, staggered and reeled further back toward bankruptcy, bolshevism, governmental anarchy, and economic chaos. Numerous wars broke out. The world—and America pratically—has been kept on a war footing for two years, while a large portion of Europe has slipped further toward utter ruin. American troops are still on the Rhine. France, in constant dread and suspense, still retains an idle standing army of 670,000 men, Poland 600,000, and England 425,000.

German reparations were deferred two years with incalculable loss to her and to Europe—and Germany is the key to the European economic situation—with the result that her commerce and industry, the activities of which radiated out through all the countries of Europe and Russia, remained dried up. German industry, at this late date, is only operating at 50 per cent capacity, while a growing indebtedness of near $100,000,000,000 stares her in the face, and her paper marks are now selling at less than 1 cent compared with 23.8 cents par. European continental commerce is paralyzed. There has occurred great deterioration in the cities, the railways, education, and communication. The adverse balance of trade against England, France, and Italy approaches $6,000,000,000 per annum. War regulations and restrictions on Europe's financial and productive activities are not yet removed.

International disarmament has been prevented, with the result, among others, that six of America's debtor nations expended $4,370,000,000 for armaments in 1920–21 compared with $1,081,000,000 in 1912. These enormous amounts could otherwise have been applied to the support of Europe's foreign exchanges and foreign trade and to the interest and principal of the debt due us, thereby permitting our own war taxes to be correspondingly lowered.

The full economic cooperation and coordination so successfully practiced among the allied nations during the war was completely dissolved, though no less vital than during the war, leaving each country to survive unaided, if it could. Currency and credit expansion has been fabulously increased since the middle of 1919. The note circulation of Germany has climbed to $22,500,000,000; of the bank of France to $7,640,000,000; and of the Bank of England to $2,210,000,000. Countries like Germany, Austria, Russia, Poland, and certain others will now be obliged to repudiate their paper currencies in order to get back to a sound business basis. There are to-day 13 different currencies in the Baltic States.

The demoralization of trade and industry has prevented most European Governments engaged in the war, England alone excepted, from levying sufficient taxes to defray their current expenditures, with the result that constant bond and currency issues to meet deficiencies have enormously aggravated the condition of credit expansion and this in turn has driven further down the foreign exchanges and so correspondingly increased the difficulties of the purchase of goods from America. France, having been denied the German indemnity until recently, has been forced to greatly expand her credit and currency for urgent physical rehabilitation purposes, causing her debt to leap to the present dizzy heights of $60,000,000,000, while that of England has been swelled to $40,000,000,000, and of Italy to $19,000,000,000.

FALL OF FOREIGN EXCHANGE ALMOST KILLS FOREIGN TRADE.

The rapid fall of foreign exchanges since the middle of 1919 has almost choked to death American foreign trade. Unsound currency inflation alone and especially when supplemented by adverse foreign trade balances inevitably drives down foreign exchanges. The exchange of the nations in central Europe and in the territory between the Baltic and the Black Seas has now completely collapsed. Both the fluctuations and the decline in foreign exchange have cut American foreign trade to pieces, and, sad to say, there has been no material improvement in the exchange situation during 1921. Many nations of Europe being without gold, unable to produce through lack of foodstuffs and raw materials, denied credit, and facing an impossible exchange situation, have entirely ceased to purchase from America.

Compared with the dollar exchange, that of England, France, Belgium, Italy, Spain, Holland, Greece, Switzerland, and Scandinavia is at a heavy discount, while that of central and eastern Europe has fallen to a normal value.

HENRY P. DAVISON'S PROPOSED REVOLVING FUND.

In vain did Henry P. Davison and other great financiers, as late as the early spring of 1920, fairly shout that "the crisis is so acute that the situation does not admit of delay, except with the possibility of consequences one hardly dares contemplate." Mr. Davison and many other economists and business men were then urging the creation of a revolving fund of $500,000,000 by this Government, an amount insignificant compared with the Nation's later panic loss of $40,000,000,000, to be placed in the hands of a strong commission of our ablest business men to be utilized as temporary credits to the helpless States of Europe, but in a safe and feasible manner which Mr. Davison clearly outlined. This amount he knew would enable those countries to come back to normal.

This plea was received with deaf ears by Republican leaders bent on every sort of pandemonium, if it was necessary to enable them later to carry the National election of 1920. Unstable European Governments had no financial standing abroad and but little at home. Their bonds sold either at extortionate interest rates or unconscionable discounts. Lacking foreign credits, many of these Governments sold their paper money abroad in vast quantities and at great discounts. They were powerless to give necessary aid to their domestic financial and commercial interests or to establish sound monetary systems. By the beginning of 1920 the increasing obstacles had become too great, the load too heavy, for these nations to bear. Europe had become deathly sick.

Republican politicians meanwhile were storming at those countries to go to work, knowing they had neither food nor materials; they were raving at them to pay the debt and interest due us, knowing that they were then starving and helpless. The people of the 12 or 15 States in Europe, already referred to as having been left most enfeebled by the war, could hold out no longer than the forepart of 1920.

THE COLLAPSE.

Amidst ever-increasing disease, starvation, poverty, unemployment, riots, and new wars, the financial, commercial, and industrial collapse came to this part of Europe early in 1920. The industrial power of Europe had broken down. This meant that her consuming power was gone—a fact of which the American laborer, capitalist, miner, farmer, sheep herder, and ranchman were then utterly indifferent, but of which each was destined soon to take sharp notice. The first effect observed was a sudden halt in the commerce of Europe. Her trade structure had collapsed. The hundreds of millions of consumers in those prostrate countries becoming entirely impoverished had abruptly stopped buying. Manufacturers and producers in England, France, Belgium, and the neutral commercial countries near by could no longer sell their products. The result was that in turn they almost suddenly either ceased or greatly reduced their purchases of billions of foodstuffs and raw materials from America. Prices rapidly fell in England, our largest customer, and this slump soon spread to neighboring nations which were still functioning economically.

The United States, as a direct effect, later experienced almost a vertical fall in prices of cotton, copper, live stock, cereals, meat products, and many lines of manufactures of 30 to 50 per cent, and hence a corresponding decrease in the internal purchasing power of her people. Nor could South America escape. Brazil could no longer sell her coffee and rubber, nor Argentina her grains, wool, hides, and meats, nor Chile her nitrates, nor Cuba her sugar. The result in South America was a quick stagnation and slump in prices at home and sudden loss of the purchasing power of her people abroad. From the sore spot of Europe already described a collapse of prices and of trade swept around the earth like a conflagration.

The remainder of the story is now known to everyone everywhere. In America it is seen in our idle ships, idle factories, idle mines, and idle men. The failure to ratify the treaty had prevented peace in Europe, and the failure of peace precipitated her economic downfall, as predicted by the ablest statesmen and financiers. The vainglorious Republican policy of "isolation" had borne its natural fruits, just as the like policy of China during past centuries.

NOT A FINANCIAL PANIC.

The present is not a financial panic, either in the old world or the new; neither is it traceable to famine, nor to wild speculation and voluntary inflation, nor to any large industrial or business failures such as has been true of past industrial panics. This panic came as a direct and proximate result of the failure and utter inability of a large portion of Europe to go to work in 1919 and increase production in all lines. Her people having thus become helpless to buy, other countries could not sell. Given the opportunity rapidly to produce, Europe could and doubtless would have solved her other problems of reconstruction without plunging the world into a panic. It is important to keep in mind that the population of Europe, exclusive of the neutral countries, was 420,000,000. Many American citizens erroneously conclude that the violent slump in prices and industry in the United States was due to a general state of overproduction, whereas in truth the world was, and is now, hopelessly behind in production as a result of war losses. There has been overproduction in one portion of the world, while the other portion was starving for the surplus and could not get it.

This condition had it been properly dealt with, did not justify the great slump in prices that has been experienced, for such course directly violated the law of supply and demand. America's situation was perhaps without a parallel since ancient Egypt dispensed her surplus to all other countries during the seven years' famine; but Egypt had no slump in prices. The world was crying for all our surpluses, but our Government and our financial and business men failed to cooperate with those in Europe in the maintenance of international commercial and trade relations so as to permit us to sell our surpluses, and at prices fixed by the law of supply and demand. Such prices would have been gradually receding war prices, but vastly higher than those prevailing during past months. Prices should have gradually decreased over a period of years as world production increased.

The Brussels conference agreed as one man that the sound, permanent reduction of prices and the return to normal prosperity "is dependent on the increase of production." The past deflation of prices in the United States, and the great slump in prices due to the panic, has been largely artificial, uneven, lopsided, and uncertain as to different industries and even as to different commodities in the same industry, because the natural law of supply and demand and of the transportation and free interchange of commodities was suspended as a result of the breakdown of the international exchange, credit, and trade situations. The free flow of American commerce back and forth with other countries was blocked or greatly obstructed.

All must recognize the present fluctuations in our domestic prices and in the volume and movement of our internal or domestic commerce as due to more or less temporary local and domestic causes, and that sound, healthful, and permanent business recovery can only be had at home as world recovery is had. When the United States gets back to the stable level of permanent prosperity the balance of the world will not be far behind. The world is far from that level now. The world's credit system must be restored before there can be a general trade revival. Reduced production in America does not help but retards permanent recovery. We should stimulate production—save on luxuries—practice economy, and keep open the foreign markets if we would bring prices down gradually and prevent the unequal fall of prices of foodstuffs, raw materials and manufactures, as well as frequent fluctuations and seesaws in price and market conditions.

NOT COMPARABLE TO OTHER PANIC LOSSES.

The causes of our present great panic losses are not comparable to those following the Civil War, when the Nation had great inflation of debased currency and credit and everyone entered on a period of wild speculation which precipitated the panic of 1873; nor are they comparable to those of the panic in Japan in the spring of 1920, due to the almost identical causes of ours of 1873. Neither are our postwar conditions to be compared with those of the war of 1812–1814, which also followed the Napoleonic Wars, when both Europe and America were left impoverished.

Republican politicians, who in 1920 were preaching "isolation" and declaring that America should live in prosperity unto and within herself and would have no sort of relations with the balance of the world, are now loudly and desperately attributing every American ill to "world causes." These politicians then joyously proclaimed "isolation" as a synonym for "Americanism," and chestily described themselves as "100 per cent Americans," with the further announcement that there should be no kind of "entanglements" with Europe. It is the irony of fate that within 12 months thereafter unparalleled American prosperity became hopelessly "entangled" with an unparalleled European panic.

TREATY RATIFICATION AS A PREVENTIVE.

It now becomes of special interest to consider more from the retrospective viewpoint whether our prompt ratification of the treaty would, according to all human calculations have stayed and prevented the visitation of the awful panic losses the American people have suffered. We do know that the lines formed by the Republican leaders early in 1919 on which they would fight treaty ratification also contemplated the uniform opposition of the Republican Congress to virtually every plan, measure, and policy for our domestic readjustment following the war that might be proposed by Democrats. We do know that this program was successfully carried out, and that as a result there is—three years after the armistice—still no disarmament, no reduction of war taxes, no treaty of peace with Germany, and no conditions of real peace in Europe. We do know that the present Republican national administration is now involved in foreign affairs "up to its eyes," and that the League of Nations—or a league, or an association of nations, or an association with nations, whichever the dodging insincere politician prefers—like Banquo's ghost, will not down. We do now know that the prostrate and ruined countries of Europe must retrace their steps taken down the decline during the past two years as the only avenue back to normal. We do now know that if instead they had started toward normal conditions two years ago, when their financial, industrial, and commercial strength was immeasurably greater than now, the present world economic situation would be vastly different. We do know that the present national administration, to the extent that it is doing anything sensible, is now adopting the same measures of relief and aid to stricken Europe that a Democratic administration proposed and urged two and one-half years ago, when Europe was in a condition to have been helped to her feet, without serious risk of a great trade and industrial collapse. If these measures will cure the panic now, why would they not have prevented its occurrence? We do know, in the recent language of Viscount Bryce, that "for three years Europe has been groping in the dark."

VITAL ECONOMIC TRUTHS.

President Wilson, in addressing Congress in May, 1919, expressed the sound views of all unbiased American economic authorities, as follows:

"We must face the fact that unless we help Europe to get back to her normal life and production a chaos will ensue there which will inevitably be communicated to this country. If only in our own interest, we must help the people overseas. Europe is our best customer. We must keep her going or thousands of our shops and scores of our mines must close. There is no such thing as letting her go to ruin without ourselves sharing in the disaster."

How truly prophetic!

Herbert Hoover, in a speech on October 3, 1919, further emphasized this combined domestic and world condition, as follows:

"We are an overseas people and we are dependent upon Europe for market for the surplus products of our farmers and laborers. Without order in Europe we will at best have business depression, unemployment, and all their train of trouble. With renewed disorganization in Europe, social disease and anarchy thrive, and we are infected by every social disease that blows from Europe. We are forced to interest ourselves in the affairs of the world if we are to thrive."

Scores of similar views could be cited. From the spring of 1919 to the spring of 1921 the Republican Congress scorned, ignored, and repudiated these vital economic truths.

WILSON'S RECONSTRUCTION RECOMMENDATIONS.

President Wilson convened Congress in extra session May 19, 1919, and, after urging treaty ratification in order early to establish conditions of peace everywhere, he strongly recommended a complete program of domestic reconstruction which embraced disarmament and repeal and reduction of war taxes, removal of war laws and war restrictions on business, return of the railroads, telegraphs, and telephone to private operation, regulation of cold-storage warehouses, use of the power over interstate commerce to check hoarding and profiteering, measures to check the high cost of living, to establish a shipping policy, to create a Federal budget, to secure the maintenance of foreign trade and international economic cooperation.

In pursuance of their program to defeat the treaty, the Republican Congress studiously and stupidly ignored most all these reconstruction proposals for nearly a year, and the most important ones until this day. This is not the occasion to enumerate the incalculable losses suffered by the American Government, American business, and the American people as a direct result of thus placing politics above patriotism on the part of certain "100 per cent Americans." "Americanism" as thus practiced clearly meant "half patriot and half politician."

As early as March, 1920, the supreme economic council made a comprehensive, but gloomy, report to the world on the state of its political and economic affairs. This report emphasized the point that Governments in Europe must acquire self-control in order that they might be able to increase production and thereby establish a sound internal credit and currency basis. The great economic conference held at Brussels in September, 1920, composed of the ablest and most disinterested financiers and economists of the world, solemnly resolved that—

"The first condition for the resumption of international trade is the restoration of real peace, the conclusion of the wars which are still being waged, and the assured maintenance of peace for the future. The continuance of the atmosphere of war and of preparations for war is fatal to the development of that mutual trust which is essential to the resumption of normal trading relations. The security of internal conditions is scarcely less important, as foreign trade can not prosper in a country whose internal conditions do not inspire confidence."

COMPARED TO THE SOUTH FOLLOWING THE CIVIL WAR.

How powerful would have been the effect of the full moral cooperation and the reasonable economic aid of the United States to those 12 or 15 States of Europe in 1919 and 1920, worst crippled by the war, in starting them on the sure road to political and business stability. Their condition was in many respects not unlike that of the South following the Civil War, when the de facto State governments were known to be weak, probably temporary, and very unstable. The result was inability to secure credit, serious discontent and internal disorder, great future business uncertainty, general retrogression, and no social or material progress until stable and legal State governments were established. Real recovery in the industrial affairs of the South dates from the organization and operation of stable governments.

To this same end the feeble and tottering States of Europe during 1919 vainly appealed to America, England, Japan, France, and the strong neutral countries—not for a single soldier, not to become involved in any objectionable or permanent way, but acting in concert—to lend their sympathetic and moral support, their friendly advice and counsel, and some economic help. Such outside interest and assistance, invaluable as a guide and a present help, would have enabled these Governments in most instances to stand on their feet. How quickly would the majority of those harrassed and suffering peoples have heeded any reasonable joint request or suggestion coming from the strong, disinterested, and friendly nations that internal order be restored, that suitable trade relations with each other be established, that rigid public and private economy be practiced, that new taxes be levied and budgets be balanced, coupled with the assurance that in the event of compliance food and raw materials would be furnished so that every citizen might live and proceed with the work of production. Early relief of personal necessities and the limited supply of materials would have gone far toward establishing secure governments and starting up production.

POLITICAL RISK BAR TO FINANCIAL AID.

For two years the investors, business men, and bankers of America have constantly proclaimed their readiness to advance necessary credits to Europe if it were not for the serious political risk involved. Government over there was of uncertain tenure. Americans were willing to take any commercial risk involved. Here it was that the first big rift in our foreign trade occurred. But for governmental uncertainty abroad the Americans would have discounted foreign commercial paper, granted short and long term loans abroad, made permanent investments in Europe, and left much of our burdensome gold surplus in our foreign branch banks, all of which would have gradually equalized and sustained the international financial and trade situation. Instead of doing these big things in a big way, however, we have made but the puniest effort at foreign trade financing. Only 11 financial institutions or agencies have been organized for that purpose, and they have been too timorous to do any appreciable amount of business.

Our abstemious course of withdrawing all relations with Europe dried up production over there, which, if prosecuted from 1919, would have supported their exchanges, reduced their inflation, strengthened their credit situation, and maintained their international trade relations. The Brussels Conference expressed the unanimous view that a principal obstacle to the restoration of normal domestic and international commerce and financial conditions was "the fact that neither the amount nor the method of paying the German indemnity had been determined upon." This two years' delay was directly due to the withdrawal of American cooperation. An unsettled condition of such vast magnitude—kept open, as it was, until May, 1921—left every producer, every investor, and every business man in Europe in a state of complete suspense and uncertainty as to the future, as it did many in America.

NOW INVOKING DEMOCRATIC POLICIES.

The general and inevitable outcome of the Republican opposition to the treaty and other readjustment measures is that in addition to the panic losses our Nation has needlessly suffered, we must render Europe far greater aid and in turn suffer far greater risk of losses in order to restore permanent normal business conditions here and elsewhere than would have been necessary had we proceeded with this duty and task in 1919. If it were not so tragical and criminal, it would be ludicrous and comical to behold Republican leaders now strenuously striving to open foreign markets and to revive our lost foreign trade—after their conduct destroyed it—by invoking all the Democratic policies to this end, policies they had so indignantly repudiated from 1918 to 1920. They now repudiate their own hitherto infallible remedy for instant prosperity—the tariff—by postponing its enactment for a year or indefinitely. They now hurriedly revive the War Finance Corporation with $1,000,000,000 capital to finance the export products of the farmers, although only the middlemen can get the aid. They now insist that foreign-trade organizations should proceed to function under the Edge Act. They quickly directed Germany to agree to the terms of indemnity. They ordered oil to be left on the free list. They are rushing the passage of an act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to arrange for the payment of the interest and principal of our foreign debt of $10,000,000,000. And, can anyone believe it, these national Republican leaders, these "100 per cent Americans," are doing all these things in order, as they announce, "to restore our international trade affairs and to stabilize economic conditions in Europe so she can buy our surplus." They now, after it is too late, talk in international terms.

Although our international commerce had almost trebled in value, Republicans now endeavor to mitigate their crime by comparing the present shrunken prices and volume of commerce in certain lines with those of 1913, as though we were expected to make no progress in the expansion of production and commerce during the past eight years. They ignore the fact that American production has been expanded 25 or 30 per cent, and that to now contract it to its former volume would mean an annual loss of income to the American people of $12,000,000,000 to $15,000,000,000 and the throwing out of employment capital, plants, labor, and other productive agencies in corresponding measure. Our prosperity depended on our maintaining this increased production and foreign markets in which to sell it.

The Federal Reserve Board has recently pointed out the fact that our foreign trade is a controlling factor in our domestic prosperity, in that "it affords a stabilizing factor which influences both (domestic) prices and amount of output." It affords an outlet for our surplus and enables us to supply deficiencies from abroad without unreasonable price changes and fluctuations that would otherwise occur. Even a small surplus will drive domestic prices much too far down, while a small deficiency advances them much higher than is at all justified by such proportionate influences.

THE BLACKEST CRIME OF THE HUMAN RACE.

Summing up the outstanding facts which governed the course of world conditions from the middle of 1919, the conclusion irresistibly follows as day the night that after a careful appraisal of the conditions and needs of the numerous States of central and eastern Europe, and of the ability of America, the neutral and others of the stronger nations, to furnish them the necessary cooperation, it was the unbiased judgment of statesmen, economists, financiers, and business men the world over that most of those States, if so aided, would be able eventually to restore normal conditions and thereby avoid a world cataclysm such as has occurred; that the defeat of the peace treaty resulted in delaying conditions of peace everywhere for two years, and in depriving the worst suffering portions of Europe of the help she was obliged to have; that in the face of the two insurmountable obstacles thus created, Europe's economic structure gave way and her purchasing power disappeared; that as a proximate result thereof the entire fabric of international credit, exchange, finance, and trade in a large measure fell down; that the stagnation and sudden violent slump in prices rapidly followed as an inevitable effect in countries having surpluses and foreign trade; that the viciously partisan course of a group of Republican leaders was responsible for the defeat and delay of peace; that these same leaders are to-day invoking the same measures, policies, and plans as the remedies to bring recovery from panic conditions which were urged by a Democratic administration and all sound economic authorities two and one-half years ago as the only safe means of preventing the very panic that has since occurred.

The most charitable comment that can be made on the conduct of these Republican leaders is that if they thus willfully and deliberately and knowingly wrecked the peace, the political, social, and economic order in many parts of the world, the act of so doing constitutes the blackest of all the black crimes committed in the annals of the human race.

OF

HON. WILLIAM C. LANKFORD,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, October 18, 1921.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, I recently wrote to the War Finance Corporation a letter which is self-explanatory and which is as follows:

Washington, D. C., October 5, 1921.

DIRECTORS OF THE WAR FINANCE CORPORATION,
TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

GENTLEMEN: There is current an impression that the War Finance Corporation will make advances for only six months, with no renewal privileges, under section 24 of the recent War Finance Corporation act.

I sincerely trust that this impression is erroneous, as such a course would render the act of no help to thousands of farmers in the South, and especially in my State.

The farmer who needs help at this season of the year and during next winter and spring will need this help not for only six months but until he can gather another crop a year later, and in some cases even longer. Farmers will be less able to pay six months from now than at present. Banks can't afford to borrow for only six months on obligations of farmers which the farmers can not possibly pay at the end of six months. I sincerely hope that the policy of the War Finance Corporation will be to make advances with a renewal privilege, so as to enable the banks to carry the obligations of farmers to such time as the farmers can reasonably meet them. Such a policy, I am sure, will make the recent act very beneficial to farmers of the Nation, and I sincerely hope such a course will be adopted.

Sincerely, yours, W. C. LANKFORD.

The reply received by me next day shows that the directors of the War Finance Corporation are giving a liberal construction to the farmers' relief act recently passed by Congress and are striving to make it a very beneficial measure.

In order that the country may understand fully the length of the term of advances obtainable under section 24 of this act, I wish to quote from the letter received by me the following:

Under the act these advances may be made for a period of one year from date of advance, with authority of the corporation to renew or extend such maturities up to a maximum period of three years from the date of the original advance.

Philander Chase Knox.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. M. CLYDE KELLY,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 2, 1921.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the permission granted by the House, I am placing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the address made by former Representative James Francis Burke, of Pittsburgh, Pa., on Friday, October 28, 1921, before the Allegheny County Bar Association, on the noble life and mighty achievements of the late United States Senator PHILANDER CHASE KNOX.

Few men enjoyed a more intimate friendship with the Pennsylvania statesman whose loss is mourned by the Nation than Mr. Burke. During his ten years' service in this body and since his retirement he held the high confidence and esteem of United States Senator KNOX. The eloquent tribute paid by Mr. Burke is wrought out of his personal knowledge of the character, aspirations, and accomplishments of the man and the statesman who was to him a "guide, counselor, and friend."

The address is as follows:

PHILANDER CHASE KNOX.

The intellectual attainments and public achievements of PHILANDER CHASE KNOX have brought more prestige and distinction to the Allegheny County bar than those of any other man, living or dead.

In many respects, his official career is without a parallel in the history of the American Government.

He was the truest exponent of the doctrine that the office should seek the man, for never from the time William McKinley made him Attorney General of the United States until the evening he fell into the arms of his Maker did he seek or encourage others to seek for him a public station.

THE PRESIDENCY.

I know, as but few men in America do know, how near he came to the Presidency, and I am convinced he could have obtained the nomination if he had been willing in the slightest degree to permit his host of influential friends in American public and private life to pursue their plans with that end in view, or if he had even been willing to attend in person the national convention, to which he had been elected a delegate at large from the leading Republican State in the Union.

More than once, in the confidence of a deep-seated and lasting friendship, he said to me: "Why should I seek the Presidency? I have no illusions about the office. I regard it as the greatest in the world, but I have lived with it and shared its confidence and vicissitudes under three Presidents, and I know too well its never-ending anxieties to have any desire to sit in the White House, and especially so as long as I can be of service to the country in other spheres of action."

His attitude toward the Presidency was somewhat akin to his frame of mind regarding public life in general up to the time he was 48 years of age, when he was called upon to succeed John W. Griggs as the highest law officer in the Government.

From the hour of that entry into the arena of public service honors vied with each other to find their resting place upon his shoulders.

PENNSYLVANIA IN THE CABINET.

Of the 36 men who have represented Pennsylvania in the United States Senate, only 6 have held Cabinet offices. Albert Gallatin was Secretary of the Treasury for 14 years under Jefferson and Madison and was elected Senator, but was denied the seat because he had not been a citizen of the United States for 9 years, as required by the Constitution. James Buchanan resigned from the Senate to become Secretary of State in the Cabinet of President Polk. William Wilkins, Simon Cameron, and Don Cameron each served as Secretary of War, and also in the Senate, but Senator KNOX is the only Pennsylvanian who resigned from the Cabinet to enter the Senate and then resigned from the Senate to return to the Cabinet.

In addition to his record in the Senate, he served in the Cabinets of three Presidents, as Attorney General under McKinley and Roosevelt, and as Secretary of State under Mr. Taft. As a matter of fact, he served officially in four Cabinets, as he held over for a short time under Woodrow Wilson in order to sign the commissions of the new Cabinet officers named by the new President. In this connection, one of the most interesting incidents in the executive and legislative history of the Nation occurred.

UNPRECEDENTED DISTINCTION.

Subsequent to the announcement by Mr. Taft that Mr. KNOX had been invited to and accepted the portfolio of State and the whole country had expressed gratification over the choice, a Washington correspondent was ushered into his library one evening and announced that he had an important constitutional question which he wished the Senator to answer.

As the Senator had become one of the greatest, if not the very greatest, expounder of the Constitution in the Nation's capital, he accepted the announcement with his usual smile and consented to answer it if he could.

Thereupon the correspondent made known the fact that the salary of the office of the Secretary of State, which office the great Pennsylvanian had already agreed to accept, had been raised while Mr. KNOX was a Senator, and he then pointed to the constitutional provision making any such Senator or Representative ineligible to fill any such office under the circumstances.

Inside of a minute, and with the utmost good nature, the Senator replied to the correspondent: "My friend, you are right. I am ineligible, and I confess that you are a more alert constitutional lawyer than either the President or myself, because neither one of us have thought of it."

The announcement was flashed over the wires and over the cables that night, and great confusion and anxiety followed as a consequence.

Mr. Taft was out of the country at the time; and I can remember as if it were but yesterday leaving Senator KNOX's library and going to my home in Washington about midnight, a short time afterwards, when I found the following telegram from Mr. Taft, who had just landed at New Orleans:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 11, 1909—9.47 p. m.

Hon. JAMES FRANCIS BURKE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I sincerely hope that Congress will pass bill to remove any doubt of KNOX's eligibility. I have no doubt that an act to repeal the bill increasing the salary of the Secretary of State will effect this purpose I sincerely hope that it will pass. I should regard the loss of Senator KNOX from the first place in my Cabinet as a public misfortune.

WM. H. TAFT.

Such was the tribute of a man who sat in the presidential chair and is now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

This was sent to me at the time, as I was Republican whip of the House of Representatives, and known by Mr. Taft to be deeply interested in Senator KNOX and the new administration. The suggestion in that telegram was carried out, and the Congress reduced the salary of Secretary of State to the former level in order that Mr. KNOX might be made eligible for the highest place in the Cabinet. Thus the constitutional obstacle was removed and two unprecedented situations arose: First, for the first time in the history of the American Government the Congress had virtually legislated a man into the President's Cabinet, and, second, for a long time thereafter the highest ranking officer in the President's Cabinet received the lowest salary of them all.

This was unquestionably one of the rarest tributes ever paid to an American citizen by the combined action of the legislative and executive branches of the Government.

But, my friends, these were not the only honors thrust upon him, for during his lifetime he was also offered a place on the Supreme Bench of the United States, which he modestly declined.

To what other man in the annals of America can anything approaching this record be applied?

RECORD OF REAL ACCOMPLISHMENT.

As for his record while in office, the story of his Attorney Generalship under McKinley and Roosevelt is the brightest constructive page in the history of American jurisprudence and American commerce. He breathed the breath of life into statutes which had been declared dead because of their alleged unconstitutionality. He struck without fear or favor against many of the greatest financial powers of his generation, and brought them to a realization of the obligation that commerce owed the Government and the Government in turn owed to commerce, and while the Nation glorifies Theodore Roosevelt for the substantial things accomplished during his administration, the following expression from the pen of Hon. Charles Emory Smith, a member of the Cabinet of both President McKinley and President Roosevelt, will indicate the credit to which Senator KNOX is entitled:

He said "One man, beyond all others—so far beyond as to be 'eclipse first and the rest nowhere,' as associated with the origin, evolution, execution, and success of the Roosevelt policies—is PHILANDER CHASE KNOX, of Pennsylvania."

President Roosevelt made himself the incarnation of the national conscience, but, with all his courage and all his determination, he could not have accomplished what he did without the legal acumen and masterly generalship of his great Attorney General.

In further confirmation of this view, President Roosevelt himself, speaking on Pennsylvania soil on October 4, 1906, said, "During the last few years the National Government has taken very long strides in the direction of exercising and securing adequate control over the great corporations, and it was under the leadership of one of the most honored public men in our country, one of Pennsylvania's most eminent sons, your present Senator, and then Attorney General KNOX, that a new departure was begun."

BLAZED NEW PATHWAYS.

It was in this city in 1902, in his speech before the Chamber of Commerce, when he first blazed the pathway along the unrealized powers and possibilities of Government control through interstate commerce under the authority of the Constitution. He carried his cause to the Supreme Court of the United States and enlarged the chart of governmental powers.

When he was reprimanded by a financier of great power for proceeding without notice to him, with characteristic force and incisiveness, he replied, "There is no ticker in the White House."

In the national convention of 1904 Elihu Root, then Secretary of State, said of Mr. KNOX:

"The Attorney General has gone on in the same practical way; not to talk about trusts, but to proceed by law for their regulation.

"No investment in lawful business has been jeopardized; no fair and honest business has been injured; but it is certain that wherever the constitutional power of the Government reaches, trusts are being practically regulated and curbed within lawful bounds as they never have been before, and the men of small capital are finding in the efficiency and skill of the Attorney General a protection they never had before against the crushing effect of unlawful combination."

ROOSEVELT'S TRIBUTE.

Regarding the courage of Senator KNOX, which was one of his outstanding characteristics, President Roosevelt said in a public speech:

"We need common sense, common honesty, and resolute courage. We need what Mr. KNOX has shown, the character that will refuse to be hurried into unwise and precipitate movement by clamor, whether hysterical or demagogic, and, on the other hand, a character that will refuse to be frightened out of any movement by any pressure or by any threat, expressed or implied."

Mr. KNOX saw in the safety appliance law, which has been declared unconstitutional, a great instrument for the protection of the railroad men of America, and for the first time in the history of the Government the Attorney General intervened in a private lawsuit and was sustained, with the result that the safety appliance law became again a living thing, and a new principle in American jurisprudence was established.

He instituted the first peonage prosecution in the United States, outside of Mexico, and convicted and punished those who were reintroducing a species of slavery in the South.

In conducting the negotiations for the laying of the Pacific cable he procured for the United States Government the most advantageous arrangement that has ever existed upon the part of any Government with respect to any other cable in the world.

He went to Paris to handle the negotiations and the multitude of intricate and legal international problems incident to acquiring the title to the Panama Canal, and he found ways to dispel doubts and, by personally supervising the negotiations at home and abroad, brought back with him from Paris a title which the whole world admits to be without a flaw.

He wrote the law creating the Departments of Commerce and Labor. He upheld the Chinese exclusion and the law to deport alien anarchists from this country.

Incident to this character of service it will be remembered that in private life he had conducted the investigations into the abuses of the insurance world which startled the country and brought about a revolution in insurance management which placed it on a sane basis and gave assurance of future security to the thrifty, law-abiding citizens of this country.

HIS STURDY AMERICANISM.

His masterful analysis and subsequent dissertations upon the League Nations became beacon lights to the American people, as a consequence of which we continued to be independent of any alliance or of any supersovereignty that might have been imposed upon us.

It was his pen that placed in final form the resolution by which the American Congress formally recognized the existence of a state of war, and it was his pen, and his pen alone, that wrote every line of the great body of the resolution that finally but a few days ago declared the existence of peace between Germany and the United States.

A PARTISAN IN LARGE SENSE.

Mr. KNOX was a partisan. The very nature of our people and the character of our institutions have made partisanship as a standing rule in our public life.

Marshall was a partisan; Adams and Jefferson were partisans; Taney and Jackson were partisans, and Chase and Lincoln were partisans; but in the light of history their decisions on great questions are revealed as based upon the law as they found it, and nothing but the law.

His heart was in the American Constitution, and no statesman or jurist of his time ever elucidated it with greater force or clearness.

During the last 15 years of his life he brightened my pathway with as fine a friendship as man ever gave to man, and now that he has gone I mingle my tribute of gratitude for the inspiration he gave me in life with the bereavement which I share with the American people as a consequence of his death.

It was an intellectual as well as a social treat to know him intimately during the period when his name and his official activities commanded attention and respect in the parliamentary bodies and great council chambers of the world.

Less people knew him intimately and more people knew him generally than most of the great men of his day. He had a social side that it was a delight to know. He cast a fly with the skill of Izaak Walton; he drove a race horse with a mastery that made a world's record; he drove a golf ball with the precision of an accomplished devotee of the royal and ancient game; he quoted the Bible with the ease of a theologian; he recited the poems of the masters with the accuracy of a professor; he told a story with a precision and a humor that convulsed the lovers of real wit; and his conversation had a charm equaled by few.

He dissected a statute and expounded a constitutional principle with the adroitness of a special pleader on the one hand and the profound reasoning faculties of a great jurist on the other.

If he was thought to be exclusive, it was modesty rather than indifference or a haughty spirit that was responsible. He was a keen observer of men, and, as a matter of fact, he knew others better than others knew him.

As an orator other men were more eloquent but none were more sincere and none more convincing as a consequence of his irresistible logic.

He participated little in running debate, but when he spoke he held the ears of the Senate and the attention of the country.

He shrank from the things that make for notoriety, but devoted himself to those greater achievements that make for fame.

Principle constantly was his guide, and the banner of expediency under which the opportunist finds a refuge was always a subject of his contempt.

The mind of PHILANDER CHASE KNOX was the mind of a master, his courage was the courage of a soldier, his vision was the vision of a statesman, his temperament was the temperament of a philosopher, his intellect was the intellect of a profound student and a finished scholar.

What wonder that he was called to sit in the seats of the mighty, and, being called, what wonder that he should have graced the high places he held with a dignity and a courage that commanded the respect of his contemporaries associated with the great governments of the world?

Gentlemen, the Nation has lost a leader and we have lost a friend.

From earthly vision we are all going, and as the years go by we pause with greater frequency to lay our companions by the wayside.

We know not now for which of us the evening star shall next light the journey across the bar.

But whomsoever it shall be, let us go as did Senator KNOX, our work well done, our example an inspiration to those who follow in our footsteps.

Good Roads for the Farmer.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARRY B. HAWES,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 1, 1921.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker, this conference report may be designated as a compromise between what was called the Townsend bill, which proposed to create a national commission and build under Government supervision and direction the roads in the States, and the Phipps-Dowell bill, which proposed to retain the control of the designation of roads by the States.

The Townsend bill, through methods of propaganda, received the indorsement of various automobile organizations throughout the United States, I believe, as the result of a misunderstanding. The Phipps-Dowell bill was indorsed by the farmers' organizations throughout the United States, and of the two bills I preferred the Phipps-Dowell bill as supported by the farmers' organizations.

Everyone understands that the main highways must be built first, because the road from the farm would be of no practical value to the farmer or the traveler unless it led some place.

The provision in the Phipps-Dowell bill provides for the expenditure of a certain per cent of national money on the main highways, but it also sets aside a very substantial proportion for the secondary highways, which lead from the farm to the main highway.

The National Government would be bankrupted in one appropriation if it attempted to build or even to match dollars with the States for the construction of the main highways in any one apportionment. Nor could any State attempt to do this. But any scheme of highway development which does not provide in express language for the secondary road—that is, the road of lesser cost, which leads to the main highway—would be not only an injustice to the farmer and residents of rural districts but it would defeat the main object of road building, which is essentially the transmitting of the products of the farmer to the market, and the transferring in return of the products of the cities to the farm.

There is one scientific rule in road construction which can always be applied. That is, that each road which is built must be of a form of construction necessary to perform the work of that particular road.

Near the dense centers of population, where tens of thousands of machines and wagons use a road, it must be necessarily of more expensive construction. As it extends farther into the State where the density of population is less, this expensive form of construction is not required.

Stated another way: A farmer leaving his own property, as he proceeds to the market will be accompanied by his next neighbor, and then his next neighbor, and during the first 4 or 5 miles there will be comparatively few who use the road unless it is an interstate highway. But as the distance increases and approaches a dense center of population the users of the road commence to increase, so that while there might be only 25 or 30 who use the road from the farm as it reached the market tens of thousands would be using it. So a safe rule is to build a road based on the amount of work it has to do.

This same rule applies to any mode of transportation.

If it is a light load, one horse can carry it; if it is a heavy load, two horses; and a more heavy load, four horses.

So the question of the character of the road always depends upon the amount of work the road has to do.

I agree with the farmers' organizations that the Phipps-Dowell bill is better than the Townsend bill, because in the last analysis it is from the farm that our food comes, the clothing we wear, the wool on a sheep's back, or the cotton from the plantation; and while manufacturers which produce the comforts of home are all now essential to our modern civilization, in the final analysis a man must have food first or he can not live, and, secondly, he must have clothing or he can not live. And these two things come from the farm, so that the farmer's convenience in transportation must be in the last analysis the very first consideration.

Federal aid in the building of roads is not a deviation from the fundamentals of government.

As far back as 1802 the National Government took an interest in this matter for two reasons: First, because the National Government controls the roads over which mail is carried; and, second, because the national defense requires some control over National and State highways.

George Washington, even in his day, looked westward with a clearer eye and surer faith than any of his generation. He was an engineer and therefore brought a trained mind to the subject of road building. The Indian trails were the threads which first bound the East and West together. Washington desired a great highway for both military and commercial purposes, but it was not until the time of Henry Clay that Congress, exercising its control over the mail and post roads, undertook the building of a great national highway, which was properly known as the Old National Road. Its legal name was the Cumberland Road.

This road was designated to extend from Cumberland, Md., to St. Louis, Mo., and was from there further extended to what is now Jefferson City, Mo. This, the first of our national highways, was born in an act of Congress of 1802, which enabled the State of Ohio to enter the Union, and provided in this act that money received from the sale of one-twentieth of the public lands in Ohio should be applied to building roads from the navigable waters of the Atlantic stream to and within the State of Ohio. Its construction was begun about 1806 and practically completed about 1840. The cost was prodigious, especially when we consider the purchasing power of money at that day with our own time.

Between Cumberland, Md., and Uniontown, Pa., it cost $9,745 per mile; between Uniontown and Wheeling the cost ran to the startling average of over $13,000 a mile.

The Constitution gave the Government the right to regulate post roads and the mails, and this implied the building of roads. Three hundred thousand dollars was asked of Congress in 1816 and more in 1818. In the following year the tremendous amount of $535,000 was asked for and voted.

When this road was completed as far as Ohio and stopped, the West had sufficient political strength to bring pressure upon Congress for its completion, and the great road swept westward and was ordered projected through the capitals of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois to Jefferson City, Mo.

In my own State—Missouri—we have spent now of Federal and State money $15,000,000 in a State-wide road system of 6,000 miles. We have added to this a bond issue for $60,000,000 in a 10-year road-building program. We have done this with the expectation that Congress would be as liberal in the future as she has in the past, which would add another $35,000,000 to our program in the next 10 years and give to our State a connected system of highways costing approximately $110,000,000.

The Missouri system provides for 6,000 miles of road reaching each county in the State, with an expensive and substantial form of construction on those roads which carry a heavy traffic of about 1,500 miles and 4,500 miles of road of a less expensive form.

This sum of $110,000,000 is only a start. It does not answer the problem in its last detail of the short haul from the farm to the main highway. If this were attempted, $300,000,000 would not suffice. But the building of these higher types of roads will undoubtedly stimulate the efforts of the county, and possibly of the State, to renewed energy.

Under the Missouri plan our taxpayers are not assessed either for the building or maintenance of the roads or for the interest to be paid upon the bonds. This all comes from the license tax upon automobiles. And it is right that the automobile, which uses the road and destroys the road, should pay for it.

I hope to see the day when the benefits of these substantial roads will become so apparent that other means of raising State moneys will be provided and a system of roads extended from 6,000 miles to 20,000; but all can not be done in a day. It takes time, money, and road education to do this.

Those who were in France, Belgium, and the European countries during the war were surprised at the fine condition of the roads. Their roads were not better built than ours, but they were better maintained.

I passed from Paris along the battle fields of Chateau-Thierry, Belleau Woods, Soissons, and stopped at Rheims, where the great cathedral was destroyed by the German shell fire. Tons of metal were poured upon these roads by high-powered cannon, and yet within a comparatively short time they were restored to their normal condition. And this was done by maintenance.

When a man says he is building a permanent road he does not state the fact. There is no such thing as a permanent road. In fact, there is nothing in life that is permanent. The European roads are good because their maintenance system is good, and any road system which does not provide for maintenance will be an expensive road system and a failure.

The patrol system provided in the State of Missouri under its new law will solve the problem if the law is properly administered, and it is the way the problem has been solved in Europe. Small breaks in the road were immediately repaired so that an entire new building was never necessary.

Constant maintenance under intelligent supervision is the economical solution for the road problem.

Road building is now a political question. Private enterprise, because of the enormous cost, can not deal with it. Like all other political questions, it demands continuous publicity.

The benefits of road building are so great that any expenditure of national money is quickly returned in varied benefits.

Missouri is doing her part. She understands that good roads pay 25 per cent interest on the amount paid for them.

It is estimated that one-third of the value of the crops of the United States are lost on account of bad roads and the impossibility of marketing perishable products at a critical time, and that not less than $250,000,000 is lost annually by the people of the United States because of bad roads.

It now costs the farmer 1.6 cents more to haul a bushel of wheat 9.4 miles from his farm to the neighboring railroad station than it does to haul a bushel of wheat from New York to Liverpool, a distance of 3,100 miles.

It has been estimated that in 25 counties, selected at random, possessing an average of 1.5 per cent improved roads, the decrease in population averaged 3,112 for each county for a 10-year period.

Contrasted with this, the record in 25 counties which possessed an average of 40 per cent improved roads revealed an increase averaging 3,195 to the county.

Good roads produce two classes of invisible revenue which returns directly to the people:

1. Reduced cost of hauling goods.
2. Reduced cost of travel.

In almost every instance of appreciable highway improvement on a systematic scale the returns from these two items alone are sufficient to pay for a bond investment.

The hauling cost on a poor road is 22 cents a ton-mile. On macadam or better roads the cost is less than one-half of this.

Suppose the improvement saved only 5 cents a ton-mile. A road carrying 10,000 tons per mile per day can be capitalized then for $10,000 at 5 per cent, for the saving is $500, which pays interest. Add the passenger traffic and rate it as low as you please, and you see how much the maintenance will cost per mile per head.

Each boy and girl that goes to school has a distance of from 1 to 5 miles to travel twice a day. Good roads will mean that a child can leave home later and return home earlier. It means an increased attendance at school, because there are periods during the winter months when the roads are impassable, and when not entirely impassable are so covered with mud, sleet, or snow that many of the little ones are kept at home by careful parents.

Every day lost from school because of bad roads means that the ultimate education of the child is delayed. It means longer periods at school and a less satisfactory progress while in school.

Every preacher and priest knows that when the roads are good the attendance at his church increases, and that bad roads in certain seasons of the year are the most serious handicaps in his work as a moral preceptor.

What applies to the church applies also to the Sunday school and the church revival.

The doctor who gets a "hurry" call and the veterinarian summoned for the relief of an animal can both make their calls quicker. Thus each is able to make a greater number of calls during the day. The element of time in securing the services of a doctor is frequently important. He knows that good roads will make his work safer, more agreeable, and quicker.

The rural free delivery man with good roads finds a saving of time, a saving of health, and for the resident it means quicker service, better service, and probably more frequent service.

The farmers' club, which is doing so much for the farmer, is usually composed of intelligent men studying questions which benefit their industry. They have fine clubhouses, regular meetings, and social functions. Good roads for these, going to and from their meetings, become a question of vital importance during portions of the year.

Good roads reduce the cost of hauling. Lands adjacent to good roads become more valuable. Population increases. Social conditions improve.

The reduction of time on a good road is equivalent to a decrease of distance.

A good road makes the farmer and user largely independent of the season of the year or weather conditions.

Where bad roads prevail farmers are forced to move their crops not when the market price is favorable but when the roads are favorable.

It is common for the farmer to find that he can not haul his products to market when prices are highest because the roads are impassable.

Good roads bring an increase of tourist travel, especially in the scenic portions of a State. All of these tourists contribute to the welfare of the community they visit.

Good roads have a tendency to inspire the building of other good things—a better breed of stock and more attention to scientific farming.

Good roads will have a tendency to stop the drift of population to the large cities, as it will provide a pleasant and quick way of transportation for the younger folks, who want entertainment and are not satisfied with being cooped up in the farmhouse during bad winter months.

It has been demonstrated that drivers of a four-hourse team can dispense with a team of horses upon arriving at a macadam road, and the same proportion obtains in the increased size of a load which can be drawn by a two-horse team.

We want roads not only on the main highways and those leading to the markets of the smaller towns but we must connect up with these main arteries, because 2 miles or even 1 mile of bad road will cause a break in the flow of the products of the farm to the market.

So ultimately and finally the road must be built for the farmer, because we must expect the farmer to feed and clothe us.

Good Roads Bill.

OF

HON. ARTHUR B. ROUSE,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 1, 1921.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the motion to recommit this bill and vote for the adoption of the conference report. The first bill enacted into law making appropriation for the construction of roads originated from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads during the Sixty-second Congress. I have been a member of the Post Office Committee during my term in Congress, and it was my pleasure to vote in committee and on final passage of the bill for the first appropriation for good roads, and I have consistently maintained that position to this time. Money appropriated by Congress for construction and maintenance of good roads will be of greater benefit to all the people than money spent for most any other purpose.

While I favor the adoption of the conference report on this bill, yet at the same time I do not see the necessity of the many provisions contained in the bill. This bill makes an appropriation of $75,000,000 for good roads for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, $25,000,000 of which shall become immediately available and $50,000,000 to be available after January 1, 1922. The bill is drawn to meet the recommendation of the President when he stated in his first address to Congress as follows:

I know of nothing more shocking than the millions of public funds wasted in improved highways, wasted because there is no policy of maintenance. The neglect is not universal, but it is very near it. There is nothing the Congress can do more effectively to end this shocking waste than condition all Federal aid on provisions for maintenance. Highways, no matter how generous the outlay for construction, can not be maintained without patrol and constant repair. Such conditions insisted upon in the grant of Federal aid will safeguard the public which pays, and guard the Federal Government against political abuses which tend to defeat the very purposes for which we authorize Federal expenditure.

Section 7 of the existing law reads as follows:

To maintain the roads constructed under the provisions of this act shall be the duty of the States, or their civil subdivisions, according to the laws of the several States. If at any time the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that any road in any State constructed under the provisions of this act is not being properly maintained he shall give notice of such fact to the highway department of such State, and if within four months from the receipt of said notice said road has not been put in a proper condition of maintenance then the Secretary of Agriculture shall thereafter refuse to approve any project for road construction in said State, or the civil subdivision thereof, as the fact may be, whose duty it is to maintain said road, until it has been put in a condition of proper maintenance.

I contend that the proposition of maintenance is fully covered by the above section and I see no necessity for the enactment into a law of pages of red-tape provisions in order to build and maintain good roads. Section 20 of this bill, which is only five lines, makes the appropriation and is sufficient. I would much rather favor an appropriation by Congress of $75,000,000 or $175,000,000 to be allotted to the States for road purposes, and I would provide that the distribution of this appropriation be by the State highway commission with cooperation of the Department of Agriculture. In Kentucky we have an able road commission. Our commissioner cooperates with the county authorities and no State derives more benefit for the money expended than does Kentucky. With the help which the Federal Government will give by this appropriation and by the equal distribution and honest expenditure by the State commission and the county authorities, I believe we would receive better results and more miles of road would be built and maintained than we will receive under the many red-tape provisions of the pending measure.

The Stranger.

OF

HON. BENJAMIN G. HUMPHREYS,

OF MISSISSIPPI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 1, 1921.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, under permission heretofore given to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I call the attention of the House to the story printed below, which I believe will richly repay any Member who will take the time to read it.

The story was written by Judge Marcellus L. Davis, of Dardanelle, Ark. Judge Davis was the American consul general to the British West Indies during the Cleveland administration and at one time judge of the fifth judicial circuit of Arkansas.

He has been a hunter and a horseman for the best part of 73 years and until a few years ago, when increasing settlement, wire fencing, deforestation, and the other destructive elements and agencies of an advancing civilization drove the fox, both red and gray, from the foothills of the Ozarks.

He maintained a pack of hounds at his home in Dardanelle. In fact, kept two packs—one composed of foxhounds for the delectation and edification of those who loved the chase; the other was a pack of beagles which served as a sort of camouflage to distract the attention of his young sons and their friends from the major pack, and so to lead them from temptation when their young hearts began to yearn for the glories of the chase and sought its enchantment in mimic war on Brer Rabbit.

"The Stranger" is not a myth. His living, breathing presence really blessed the earth, and although his origin was shrouded in mystery and he could not exhibit a certified pedigree that would admit him to association with the elect, somewhere, somehow, through the mystic processes of evolution, I doubt not that he bred back to the purple.

According to the test of the genealogists he was not born great, and, sadder still, greatness was not thrust upon him; but, as many another choice and master spirit had done before him, unheralded and unannounced, he achieved greatness. Clear lined, clean limbed, cold nosed, and true running, he won and held to the day of his death the right to live and walk and have his daily being in company with Walkers and Birdsongs and the other aristocracy of his day.

The fox has gone now and the pack is scattered. The musical confusion of yelp and echo no longer blend in concord of sweet harmony among the foothills; the winding horn has long since sounded the last tattoo; but Judge Davis and his big Hambletonian are still familiar figures on the streets of Dardanelle and the memory of "the stranger" is green throughout the countryside.

To those who have felt the thrill, whose quickened pulse has leaped to ecstacy under the impulse of such sweet thunder,

I commend this story, but knowing so well my utter inability to draft a suitable introduction to this classic, I shall summon the bard of Avon to that service:

THESEUS:

Go, one of you, find out the forester;
For now our observation is perform'd:
And since we have the vaward of the day,
My love shall hear the music of my hounds—
Uncouple in the western valley; let them go!
Dispatch, I say, and find the forester.
We will, fair queen, up to the mountain's top
And mark the musical confusion

HIPPOLITA:

I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in a wood of Crete they bay'd the bear
With hounds of Sparta; never did I hear
Such gallant chiding; for, besides the groves,
The skies, the fountains, every region near Seem'd all one mutual cry. I never heard
So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.

THESEUS:

My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So flew'd, so sanded, and their heads are hung
With ears that sweep away the morning dew;
Crook-kneed, and dew-lapp'd like Thessalian bulls;
Slow in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like bells,
Each under each. A cry more tuneable
Was never holla'd to, nor cheer'd with horn,
In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly:
Judge when you hear.

THE STRANGER—AND HOW A PITIFUL PUP BECAME THE PRIDE OF THE PACK.

[By Marcellus L. Davis.]

From where he hailed, no one knew; and whither he went, no one cared. He was simply a little shivering, wandering waif, upon the vast world of dogly possibilities, without a home, without a master, without a friend, and as forlorn a beast, as dismal of countenance, and as desolate to look upon as ever stood up in so much tattered dog skin. He was a big-eared, loose-jointed, shamble-gaited hound puppy; neither more nor less, and lean, lank, and lubberly, with a backbone upstanding, sharp as the teeth of a cross-cut saw, every rib of his slab sides countable with absolute accuracy, and every joint of his slouching tail as clearly marked as the knots in a rope. His color was of a dingy soot variety, with a mottled ring round his neck, and here and there along his sides it seemed as though a dash of dirty buttermilk had adhered to his rough-haired hide to break the monotony of his gloomy hue.

He was probably 10 months or a year old, not more, and he looked as one who had battled with every adverse element of life, from puppyhood to doghood. When we first saw him a stout string dangled from his tail and told a tale of where once rattled a festive tin can, the frightful jangle whereof, no doubt, first drove him to desperation, thence to distraction and exile.

He was "nobody's darling," and he seemed to know it and to express it by his conciliatory manner and modest mien, so exaggerated as to make him appear as an emaciated apology for being alive at all, with a solemn promise never again to be guilty of a like offense and with a plea for pity as plainly written upon his meek face as the tawny spots above his eyes. Nevertheless, the horses kicked him, the old hounds snubbed him, and the young ones snapped him and made his life miserable. But somehow he rustled a living, such as it was; at any rate, he lived, and more than that, never a horn tooted for a start for a fox chase without "the Stranger" (that's what we had got to calling him) would materialize and be on hand with military punctuality. Sometimes he would seem almost to rise out of the earth on the spot; at others he would flit into the pack, like a shadow out of the moonlit woods on the roadside, and then again we might not note his presence until the meet had been reached and we were ranging the hills for a strike.

But let us pause just here to remark that there is small similarity between the fox chase of the South and that of the old countries where the red fox furnishes the sport and runs by daylight, with the pack close followed by the hunters. Here the chase is invariably by night, and the gray fox is the game. He is equally as cunning and as full of tricks, but neither as swift nor as wide of range as his red brother of the older States. Hence it is that the far-roving, patient, true-trailing "strike" dog is of more value, though perhaps slower, than the hot-nosed pacemaker, the red fox hound, that must perforce run from the jump or not at all; for if you give a red fox a 30-minute trail start you have a race on hand that will last you till long after the "cows come home" and lose you a brush into the bargain; and the ranging grounds here are not like the old countries either; and you have no need of the thoroughbred, cross-country flyer, to clear five barred fences and brooks and ditches, etc.

That would not work in a wire fence country anyhow, even though the ground would otherwise permit. What you want is a steady steed, free-going and sure-footed, and, above all, a good hill climber—many a mule answers the purpose—and then you want in your pack a few absolutely reliable hounds who will open on nothing but a fox. The rest may be good, bad, or indifferently trained, fast or slow, it matters little, just so they are game to run when the chase is going and are true hounds. But you want nothing in the pack but hounds. The smartest cur or terrier will spoil the chase, and the smarter he is the sooner he'll do it; and that's about the right equipment for a fox chase in the South, with which, if you once get your trail straight and fairly going, you will rarely fail to get your brush at the end, the length of the race depending on the speed of the hounds.

But to return to "the Stranger." We had said that he was always on hand. We had all somehow come to recognize his right to be along, a sort of "skeleton in the closet" appendage to the pack, but his object in going was hardly so clear, for he seemed not to have the slightest notion of the object of the expedition, and nobody had ever heard him give tongue, except when stepped on or kicked by a horse. However, we paid little attention to him usually; indeed, none more than to know that he was always there. But several had remarked that when the chase was once fairly up "the Stranger" was seldom seen about the horses, but his dingy color easily escaped notice in the dark. And another thing that we happened to remember afterwards, and that was that whether the chase turned out to be short or long, two hours or six, whenever the fox was caught, whoever was first to reach the spot was sure to find "the Stranger" there.

As the season progressed it was noted that "the Stranger" was improving, i. e., from some mysterious source he had taken on a little flesh and a little courage, and had begun to round up and to fill out, that his framework was fine, his ears long, pendulous, and beautifully hung, his muzzle excellent, and his eyes big, brown, and honest, and his color clearing up into fine shades of indigo blue and chocolate tan; but that cowed, whipped-out, humble look still marked him as a sneak and a skulker, the impress of a multitude of snaps, snarls, and thrashings, and he still slunk along in the rear or hung on the flank of the pack, or, like a shame-faced shadow, stole stealthily through the outskirts of the hunt.

Well, one fine night in November, when the moon rode high, we had assembled at the haunt of an old dog fox, about 9 miles distant in the foothills. We had ridden rapidly, deeming it well to wear the wiry edge off the young hounds and steady the old ones down with a good gallop before turning in for the night's work. We expected nothing less than a "night's work," for this old fox in question had never failed to show up in gallant style, and for several reasons he had tantalized the best packs in the country with his unfailing certainty to challenge all comers with a good race and the equal certainty and facility with which he never failed to shed his pursuers, send them to a cold trail, and then to a dead loss whenever he grew worried with the entertainment. He was called the "beater," in later years "the old beater," and he had earned the title. Some of the Negroes of the neighborhood had grown superstitious of him. They said that he was not a fox at all, that they had seen him, and that he was a kind of a cross between a big bat and a wildcat, that he was winged and web-footed, and that he would run till he got tired and then rise and fly to the mountains and rest, then come down and run again, and so on. But we knew better, for he had been seen too often. He was just simply an old, seasoned "beater," and a good one, too, and had given more horses the thumps, more dogs hard fits, and more men the headache, and had inspired more scoldings and sermons upon the subject of breaking the Sabbath day by running a fox chase past the meridian of Saturday night into Sunday morning than all the other foxes in our congressional district. But here we were, all dismounted, waiting to breathe the horses and give the hounds a little time to shake their ears and lap some water from the mountain branch that brawled near by. Some of us were eating a light lunch or chewing an apple, or tightening a girth, or chatting over the plans of the night, or looking at a new dog, when one of the party, who stood away some paces, said: "Hush; I hear a horn," pointing his finger out toward the shadowy mountain slope to the west. We all listened; then another remarked: "That's not a horn; it's a hound; and he has a mighty mouth on him." "Whose could it be?" said another; "ours are all here, unless," he added, reflectively, "it is 'the Stranger'." "Let us see about that," said another, and a little tattoo was tooted on a horn that brought the whole band up in a caper of wagging tails and flapping ears, and they were called off by name—Trump and Trooper, Bell and Bugler, Rush and Ringwood, Comet and Fly, Game and Gypsy, and all the gang present, impatient, and eager, except "the Stranger," on whom no one spent a thought.

By this time the running hound, to whom we had been listening, had described a circle on the bench of the mountain above us and was now coming straight as a railroad right down on us. It was a splendid voice that came rolling down the slopes. Sweet as a flute, clear as a clarion, bold as a bugle, and steady as a church bell, it poured its symphonous tide like a rolling river, through the wide spreading valley, inundating the sleeping earth with its mighty volume of mellow music. At a signal each of us gathered as many hounds as we could hold onto and we started a runner to the crossing to see the chase and who was the chaser, etc. In a jiffy we heard the hoofs of his bald-faced pony clattering back, and as he came he yelled out: "Turn 'em loose; turn 'em loose, every one, for I'll be blankety blank blanked if it ain't the old beater himself, and 'the Stranger's' hotfoot right in his wake, lickety brindle, and making him hump for his life, not 50 yards behind him."

In less time than it takes to tell it the entire pack, released, was thundering on the trail. We knew exactly where the chase would lead and how he would swing a circuit of some 7 miles in circumference, and just where he would cross the stream that drained the valley, and the precise spot where he would jump the road on his way back to the mountain. A sharp gallop of 10 minutes brought us to the place. We halted to listen. For 20 minutes all was silent. Then a low, dim buzz of sound from the distant foothills of a parallel range of mountains that marked the eastern horizon came faintly sobbing on the night wind. Then it rose and freshened and died down and swelled forth as the pack topped the ridges and sank into the intervening valleys. Then, stronger and stronger it grew, and louder and louder it rose, into a well-sustained stream of sound, melodious, magnificent, and mighty, without a halt or hitch, the loss of a note or the drop of a stitch, and coming straight as a rifle shot to the spot where we silently sat on our horses. "Well, the 'old beater' is doing the square thing to-night," muttered a low voice. "Hush," said another; "here he comes." A soft swish through the bushes, a low hah-hah-hah, a gray flash across the moonlit road, a gray streak vanishing in the gloom of the woods, and we knew that the fox had passed. And then came the pack; a forest of tails feathering the moonshine, a mottled mass of long-eared, sinuous, rushing hounds, all in full cry, not a hundred yards in the rear, bellowing forth a cataract of music so thunderous as to rock the earth itself and shatter the acorns from the trees hard by. But what was the matter with "the Stranger?" We could all see that he was leading by a good dozen lengths, but he was running mute, dumb as an oyster. Well, all old fox hunters know how that was. It often happens with a timid dog in a hostile pack. The poor fellow was just afraid of the other dogs; afraid that it might be wrong, and that they would resent it if he gave tongue; but, bless your heart, gentle reader, when we stood up in our stirrups and gave him the old yell and halloed "Hurrah for 'the Stranger'!" he came out most bravely, and thence to the end the music rang perfect. His vast voice rose above and dominated all. It filled every crack and chink and crevice, and made the music sound as solid as a storm. He led the orchestra as he led the pack.

But the "old beater" was not done yet. In fact, he thought that he had just fairly begun. He swept another shorter circle through the valley and yet another, still shorter. However, "the Stranger" was a new feature of the chase that he had not calculated on, for he set him a faster pace and "the Stranger" crowded him closer and closer all the time. He could find no leisure on his doubles in which to rest. If he halted a moment for a little breath, "the Stranger" would be right on to him the next, with all the pack at his heels. They lost no time now, with "the Stranger" leading, and the last time we saw the "beater" cross the road on his way to the mountains his plume was on the drag; he looked worried, and his "hah-hah-hah" was coming short and labored from his heaving flank. Then he began to corkscrew his way up into hills and cliffs. Then fell a hush, save now and then a whimper from some discouraged hound or a low howl that made us all sad. "Well," said one, "I guess the 'old beater' has about got tired of the fun and is getting ready to turn out the lights and ring down the curtain." "Yes," replied another, "that's where they always lose him; we may as well blow out and quit; but we have had a fine run all the same," and he had raised his horn to his lips to blow when, like the peal of a trumpet, "the Stranger's" splendid voice came rolling down the hillside in full cry and hot pursuit, followed in a few minutes by all the rest of the pack, and a little later the tired fox, with drooping tail and hot and rapid hah-hah-hah, bounded across the road through a break of brush, with the hounds running free and fast not 50 feet in the rear. He ducked and dodged and doubled through the thickest of the thickets he could find, but the eager hounds swarmed through en masse, and right onto him, and he had not a moment in which to recover his wind. Then he made a bold dash for the cliffs again; but the woods were open, the running free, and "the Stranger" was too warm for him, and presently we heard him squall, then a confusion of squalls and growls, and when we rode up to the spot the "old beater," the wizard of the woods, lay lifeless among his enemies, and that's the end of the narrative.

However, it might not be out of place to tell the secret of the "old beater's" former successes in evading the dogs whenever he got ready to quit the race. It was dead easy, and the old scamp had really come to enjoy the sport. A "'possum" hunter, who came clambering down the cliffs to the spot where we stood about the dead fox, told us about it.

He said that when the hounds first came out of the valley and over the bench of the mountain he was standing near the brink of the ledge, where a long cliff or column of almost solid rock extended upon either side of him some four or five hundred yards. When he heard the hounds come up the bench he stepped back behind the brush and watched the whole proceeding; presently, "clipity, clipity, clip" came the fox and darted through a small thicket, disappearing over the brink of the cliff. Next came "the Stranger," belting it hard, and not a hundred yards behind the balance of the pack. "The Stranger" dashed straight on by, some 50 yards, then whirled, and circling a couple of times thrust his way through the small thicket at the brow of the cliff and howled. Then he heard the noise of a scramble and a scrape, and a heavy thud at the bottom of the cliff, some 40 feet below, and then "the Stranger's" voice in full cry, running again, straight for the valley. Upon examination he found that an ash tree grew from within 10 feet of the bottom of the ledge to the top, and leaning near the summit, within 3 feet. When the fox had disappeared over the bluff he had simply jumped upon this leaning tree and ran down it. It was an easy trick for a fox, but a most hazardous feat for a dog to attempt, but "the Stranger" did it gamely, and though it bunged and bruised him and cost him a broken rib, it made him the pride of the pack and the prime favorite of every fox hunter in all the country. There was no other place in a quarter of a mile of either side of the ash tree where the cliff could be climbed by anything, and the tactics of the "old beater" heretofore had always been to run his race gamely till he tired, then make for his tree and climb up and sit on the bluff till the hounds worked their way round and slip down the tree and sit at the bottom till they worked round again, and then run up again and down, and so on, and so on, till they were worried out and entirely beaten.

We had the tree chopped down that very night by the "'possum hunter" and went home with the finest brush of the season. After that chase "the Stranger" had a home everywhere he went and was fattened and feasted by all hands. He has long since gone where the good dogs go, but he led the chase for many a year and left many illustrious descendants, some of whom are famous pack leaders to this day; but the man who owns one most like "the Stranger" is considered the most fortunate.

Burial of the Unknown Soldier.

OF

HON. R. CLINT COLE,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 14, 1921.

Mr. COLE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the unknown soldier peacefully sleeps hard by the marble splendor that is the amphitheater at Arlington.

Somewhere in the United States the band was playing a solemn march. The people from every walk in life were following in silent concourse. Fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, and sweethearts with tear-dimmed eyes and saddened souls were marching to the music of war. In the van a company of soldiers in uniform or young men in citizen's clothes heeding the call of their country. A great throng was gathered at the station. The rumbling train approached, hurried farewells and loving embraces were exchanged, and the train pulled away amid the cheers and tears of those left behind. The gauntlet of sickness and disease in camp was run. The terrors of the treacherous seas were braved, the front-line trenches reached, and in the midst of that inferno of war one of those who on that fateful morning marched away was struck by a messenger of death, his immortal spirit wafted into the vast unknown, and in yonder hallowed ground lies his sacred remains, the undying symbol of a nation's devotion to heroic sacrifice.

He is called the "unknown soldier." It was my privilege some years ago to visit for the first time one of the burying places for the soldiers of the Civil War. As I slowly walked through the narrow streets of that silent city of the dead and read the inscriptions that appeared on the marble slabs that marked their last resting places I was impressed with the great number that bore but the single word "unknown." As I there stood, in fancy I visited the burying grounds all over the land where sleep the brave, and on every hand observed the one word, "unknown;" "unknown." Then I was constrained to think, in this relation, how little does that one word signify. At the call of the mighty Lincoln they were there. On the long marches in the sunny southland they were there. In the death and devastation of battle they were there. Somewhere in the great conflict they fell, and while that name to which they responded in full life has gone for all time, in the hearts and souls of a grateful people they are to-day and forevermore shall be known.

So shall it be with the brave boys who sleep in unknown graves, victims of the last fearful carnage. Born in the "land of the free and the home of the brave," they had successfully fought the battles of early existence, and standing upon the threshold of the higher possibilities of life, looking with eager, anxious eyes upon the broad expanse of a brightly illuminated future, heard the far cry and proud boast of despotic domination, relinquished all—home, friends, fame, and fortune—sailed away to foreign lands, and in that seething caldron of battle their strong young bodies succumbed to the awful engines of destruction and their brave, kindly spirits carried to that realm where God reigns and peace forever endures.

While they have gone, their names and places of burial unknown, that for which they sacrificed and "paid such full measure of devotion" shall be known, honored, and revered until time shall be no more.

It matters not what his station in life. It matters not to what lowly estate he may have been born, the manner of his death exalts him to a splendor surpassed by no human being.

During the progress of the war I was riding on a train in one of the mid-Western States. It was in that day when the custom prevailed of displaying banners upon which were stars equaling the number of boys that had gone to the war from that home. As we rumbled along through the country my vision fell upon a little window in which there was a small square of cloth with three stars dotting its surface.

It was a little, old cottage standing there by the side of the road. The fence along the front was old and delapidated. It was surrounded by straggling trees in full foliage, and an undergrowth of bushes entangled and unkempt. Its rough and ragged exterior bespoke for its occupants a life of poverty and want and impressed one with the solemn thought that the effulgent sunshine of happiness and contentment had seldom, if ever, entered there. But loyalty recks not with poverty and humble environment restrains not the souls of patriots.

The three stars in that dark and diminutive window gave forth the intelligence that from that humble home three boys had marched away into the awful vortex of a World War. When that revelation came it was no longer the little cottage robbed of the sunshine by the overhanging branches, enveloped in the somber shadows of penury, but from those stars, in sentiment, there emanated a brilliancy outrivaling the sun in splendor, transforming the dank domicile of despond into a pretentious palace of princes, where an uncrowned queen whispered into their expanding souls the imperishable lessons of loyalty and devotion to duty. It may be that the "unknown soldier" on whom such signal honor has been bestowed at Arlington was one of the boys that marched away from that humble home. Such is the spirit of America. Whether known or unknown, rich or poor, of low or high estate, when sacrifice for the common weal is made the barriers that might have been builded between the various grades of society as determined by the birth, or vocation pursued by the individual, are torn away and in their stead altars reared where homage is paid and sacrifice made only to the gracious God of universal good will.

In that cataclysm of pitiless slaughter thousands of the brave American boys made the supreme sacrifice, and, known or unknown, their humble graves still dot the gory fields of sunny France. Quickened flower buds bursting into beauteous bloom. Refreshing dewdrops sparkling in life's morning sun were they, and to save a struggling world were crushed beneath the ruthless heel of relentless war. Shall it ever be truthfully said that they sacrificed in vain? That for which they died is yet incomplete and unfinished. The ominous clouds of envious strife are yet hanging upon the eastern horizon reflecting the lurid light of the receding sun of permanent peace. Those boys died for the honor and integrity of the American Union and the preservation of the civilization of the world. What greater service can the people now living perform, what greater honor bestow, than to call into requisition every power, every faculty, every agency that shall have a tendency to complete the work for which they died?

One of the greatest steps in the attainment of that glorious goal is the elimination, so far as is possible, of all the causes of recurring wars.

As a Nation we believe in the principles of peace. Primarily a Christian Nation; and we know that the loud blasts of the trumpets of war are ever out of harmony with the sweet cadences of Christian culture.

To that end, on the invitation of the President of the United States, the representatives of the leading nations of the world are now here assembled. Never in the history of the world has there been such an auspicious gathering. The lessons of the late war are beginning to take root. The soldiers living may soon know that the heroisms and sacrifices of their comrades were not made in vain, but standing upon the exalted eminence of heroic achievement, their anxious eyes trained toward the breaking dawn of a new day, please God, they may soon see the fulfillment of the prophecy of old, that—

> They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more.

Then, relieved of the burdens and anxieties of war, humanity, in the exercise of its highest ideals, may march onward and upward, eliminating the relics of barbarism from the realms of civilization, and finally attain to that loftiest goal, where all men shall recognize the universal brotherhood of man and fatherhood of God, and in one mighty chorus chant the glad refrain of "Peace on earth, good will toward men."

On Senate Bill 1072, to Amend the Act for the Construction of Rural Post Roads.

OF

HON. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,

OF NEW JERSEY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 31, 1921.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the central control of roads of this country. Centralization is the vice of the present day.

This law is likewise unjust to many States, and I will take my own as an example.

I find that if $75,000,000 is spent under this law New Jersey would contribute $2,165,250 and would get back only $960,000, so that over half of what she contributes goes to other States. It is worth while to make this absolutely plain.

In the last fiscal year the total internal revenue of the United States was $5,391,902,597.64, of which New Jersey contributed $155,176,850.93, or nearly 3 per cent, the actual percentage being 0.02887. She contributes that per cent of $75,000,000, or $2,165,250. On the other hand, by this bill, section 4, the appropriation, after certain deductions, is apportioned among the States in the following manner: One-third in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census; one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery and star routes in all the States at the close of the next preceding fiscal year, as shown by the certificate of the Postmaster General, which he is directed to make and furnish annually to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The area of New Jersey in square miles is 7,514 and that of the United States 2,973,890. New Jersey's area is only one-fourth of 1 per cent.

The population of the United States, excluding the possessions, is 105,710,620. New Jersey's population is 3,155,900, or nearly 3 per cent—0.0298—of the whole.

The mileage of rural free delivery routes in the United States on June 30 last was 1,163,896, and the mileage of star routes in the United States was 150,239. The total for the United States is 1,314,135.

The mileage of rural free delivery routes in New Jersey is 7,749, and the like mileage of star routes was 500, making altogether a mileage of 8,249. This mileage is less than 1 per cent—0.0062—of the whole.

The average of these percentages is 0.0128, and that per cent of $75,000,000 is $960,000; thus New Jersey would pay in more than twice what she would receive.

The principle of the act is to give free roads to the truck and the automobile. These through roads hurt rather than help the country through which they pass. They are like a through railroad with no stops. Local roads build up the locality and can be fairly charged to the locality. Through ways glutted with fast travel cost much to construct and maintain. The travel should pay for this, but it goes free; no reasonable system of motor license will pay enough. The State must pay for construction wholly for every mile where houses average less than 200 feet apart, and half for the rest, and the State must pay all the maintenance and the repairs caused by heavy through traffic.

Freight ought to pay for the maintenance of way. In old times when freight went by road tolls were charged. When the freight went by railroad, and the roads only served the locality, that locality rightly assumed the cost. Now freight goes by road on these interstate highways and might justly pay tolls, which would be much fairer and simpler than to depend on license fees which go to other States. But this bill forbids all tolls. Perhaps the turnpike company, which keeps a road in perfect repair, may come in again. Some perfect through highway system will be devised if the highway is to take a large share of the railroad business.

It may do so, for the advantages of sending freight by truck are very great; the truck does not have to go on sidings or wait for a train. It can go through to its destination, and needs no terminals. It may prefer an iron road, and if so, it will get it and pay for it.

But this is no time to appropriate seventy-five millions to put the railroads still more out of business; the country can not afford it just now.

New Jersey can afford to build her own roads, the best anywhere. She can not afford to pay for other people's roads in the great expanse of other States, and ought not to be asked to do it.

I opposed the first road bill. The system is growing into a menace of centralization and the exploiting of my State for the benefit of others.

Under this bill $10,000,000 a year is likewise to be appropriated for national forest roads, in which New Jersey has no direct interest, and 2½ per cent of the whole appropriation goes to the Department of Agriculture for supervising the work.

On the Good Roads Bill, S. 1072.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM WILLIAMSON,

Tuesday, November 1, 1921.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the good roads bill now before the House is one of the most important measures that the Congress has had under consideration at this session. Not only is it in line with the Republican national platform, as suggested by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], but it is in line with good sense and fair play.

Complaint has been made because it is claimed that it unduly favors the large but sparsely settled States, but what shall we say of the rivers and harbors appropriations, and particularly the vast amount spent to improve the harbors of New York, Maryland, Louisiana, and California. The vast sums expended for naval construction help in large measure to build up the cities in whose harbors the shipyards are located. What is true of naval construction is also true of nearly every other national activity. In the very nature of things we can not distribute appropriations equally all over the country, as its activities are to a considerable extent localized; but are they therefore the less national?

Aside from reclamation, there is perhaps no activity that so generally benefits the whole people as good roads. There is no one improvement so generally used by all the people, and perhaps none that contributes more to the uniform development of the whole country and the happiness of its people.

Certainly nothing can be more just than that the Government should aid in constructing the roads over public lands, reservations, and through our national forests. My State has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in the construction of roads through Indian reservations, Indian allotments, and through our national forest reserves. From none of these do we derive one dollar in taxes. It is one of the merits of this bill that it seeks in a measure to afford relief from this crying injustice.

Unfortunately for South Dakota, the bill, as drawn, offers little relief on account of untaxed lands in the State, as the "unappropriated public lands" are practically a thing of the past. The extra allowance for public lands should have been extended to Indian reservations and park lands, of which there are in our State at least 6,600,000 acres from which the State does not derive one cent in revenue. Under the bill $75,000,000 is to be apportioned, as follows: One-third in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census; one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural-delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery and star routes in all the States at the close of the next preceding fiscal year. Each State must, of course, match its Federal aid apportionment fifty-fifty in order to avail itself of its proportion of this allotment.

While South Dakota under this apportionment will be benefited far beyond what it will contribute in general taxation toward the national good roads program, it will do little more than reimburse our treasury for what we have expended and will continue to expend on Government-owned lands within our borders.

In addition to this, the bill carries $15,000,000, which is especially set aside for the survey, construction, reconstruction, and the maintenance of forest roads and trails. This investment will pay for itself many times over in the mere matter of the protection these roads will afford against forest fires and in the added value it will give to standing timber which otherwise would be inaccessible and therefore unsalable.

We recognize that this provision will be an indirect benefit to our people, but scarcely more so than to the people of adjoining States who are now making annual pilgrimages to our beautiful Black Hills, where the national forests are situated.

On the whole, the bill is a most commendable piece of legislation and should be passed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 5, 1921.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted by unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD and print the so-called "slacker lists," I desire to call attention to a letter of The Adjutant General, P. C. Harris, dated November 1, 1921.

It is my intention to insert these lists on the 5th day of each month until all of the names are printed. No good soldier will be injured by the publication of his name in these lists, but on the contrary if his military record is one to be proud of the publication will only serve to call attention to that record. If by mistake the names of good soldiers have not been eliminated from the record, it will be my pleasure and duty to insert in the RECORD the facts in each individual case and to see that the facts are brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, who is as anxious as any soldier of the late war with Germany to have the records correct. Mistakes ought to be corrected while the men are living and while there is evidence to substantiate any valid claim as to service.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, November 1, 1921.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of November 5, 1921, lists of alleged draft deserters, which lists were released by the War Department for publication between September 5 and October 4, 1921, both dates inclusive.

A copy of the statement to be printed at the head of the lists is also herewith.

There is also transmitted herewith for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a list of the names of registrants which have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the RECORD, the reasons for such removals being set forth in the second paragraph of the statement which is to precede the lists in the RECORD.

Very respectfully,

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

LOCAL BOARD FOR THE COUNTY OF GRANT, STATE OF WISCONSIN.

1115 Willie Birch (Willie Ellsworth Birch), Fennimore, Wis. (Maywood Farm, Rochester, Minn.)

The men whose names appear below, and who were under the jurisdiction of the local boards named, were, according to the public draft records, classified and reported by the draft authorities as deserters from the military service of the United States. The lists in which these names were originally included have been given at least one month's publicity.

The name of any man who since the publication of the lists has been found to have actually rendered service in either our own forces or in those of the Allies during the period between May 18, 1917, and November 11, 1918, is not included, nor is that of any man who though he rendered no service during the period mentioned has since the publication of his name been found to have been erroneously inducted or to have been erroneously certified as a deserter, nor that of any man who is known to be no longer living.

Every reasonable effort has been made by the War Department to eliminate from these lists names which for any of the aforementioned reasons should not appear thereon. Should it develop, however, that certain of the names listed below should for any of these reasons likewise be removed, notice to that effect will be published in each such case in a later issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

LOCAL BOARD FOR THE COUNTY OF AUTAUGA, STATE OF ALABAMA.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PHIL D. SWING,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 9, 1921.

Mr. SWING. On November 11, on a little hill in Arlington Cemetery, near the classic amphitheater and overlooking the beautiful city of Washington, will be buried the remains of our unknown American soldier, who died in battle fighting for God, for country, and humanity. Accompanying that body on its way to its final resting place will be the greatest gathering of the world's greatest men, including our own officials and high representatives of all foreign Governments. On that unknown dead nations will vie with each other in conferring their highest honors. Thus will be expressed the gratitude of America and of the world for the great sacrifices made by all those boys of ours who unselfishly died for their country and in defense of civilization.

No words of mine can so fittingly express the eulogy my heart would speak for the unknown soldier dead as those stirring lines written by my fellow townsman, Albert Durham:

Bugles—and—drums,
Silence! He comes!

Lord of the manor of Valor and Truth,
Treading the portals of manhood in youth;
Crowned in the temple where service is fame
More than in marble enchiseling his name.

Write high on your banners, O men of the west,
That valor has challenged to offer your best.
Your answer is given—the world is bequeathed
The hours that forever with laurel are wreathed;
Nay, more than with laurel—with tributes that stream
From world hearts o'er sacrifice lordly supreme.

Oh, mothers, ye mothers, ye mothers of men,
Shall war claim the fruits of your travail again?
Shall the labor of love feed the shambles of hate
That stand open mawed each new birth to await?

Oh, mother, Oh, sister, Oh, womankind clan,
The crown of thy mission is merged in a man.
In a man that will face ev'ry stroke of death's knell
And the beasts that are branded with searings of hell.

Aye, proud be thy station, thy privilege dear
To nurture such sons as are mindless of fear;
Who spring to defense of the daughters of right
And measure their worth by the stress of the fight.

Bugles—and—drums,
Silence! He comes!

Lord of the manor of Valor and Truth,
Treading the portals of manhood in youth—
Low at the altar of country and God,
Resting, at home, in the tent of the sod.

We stand with bowed heads before the grave as glowing tributes, such as these, are spoken in praise of the heroic dead. Involuntarily our thoughts revert to the dark and terrible days which preceded and led up to the close of the Great War. We view again those scenes of wreck and ruin and desolation and sadly contemplate the want and misery and suffering resulting from the war—the awful price of victory.

When the last words have been spoken the concourse breaks up and the great men of many nations withdraw from the side of that grave to gather in the council chamber, there to deliberate and determine the fate of man and the destiny of the world. God grant that the minds and consciences of these men will have been so touched and quickened that out of that conference will come the beginning of a new era in which truth and justice and right will prevail in the place of greed and avarice and might, and that the war to end war shall not have failed, and that the innumerable sacrifices of men and women all over the world shall not have been made in vain.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD E. BROWNE,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 16, 1921.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following:

[From the report contained in the Portsmouth Herald of Sept. 13, 1921.]

THE ADDRESS DELIVERED BY EX-CONGRESSMAN GEORGE C. HAZELTON AT CHESTER, N. H., ON THE OCCASION OF THE MEMORIAL SERVICE OF CORPL. FORSAITH, WHO FELL IN BATTLE IN FRANCE, BROUGHT BACK FOR BURIAL IN HIS NATIVE TOWN.

We have assembled here to-day, my friends, in this memorial hall, obedient to a common impulse of the human heart to take an appropriate part in the burial service of the brave soldier, Corpl. Forsaith, a son and worthy citizen of Chester, the light of whose life went out in defense of his own and foreign lands, and whose manly form brought home by a grateful Government, under the guardianship of the American Legion, lies now at rest in this casket here, still habited as when he fell in combat with the foe, wrapt, as you see, within the folds of the Stars and Stripes and banked with flowers that come from hearts that love and honor him for his sterling qualities and the soldier record he has made.

To him, his name, service, and memory, we bring our homage, the best we have, to-day.

Nor shall we forget as we bring our offerings to this passing bier the honor due the other soldier hero sons of Chester, one of whom, Emerson Maple, lost his life on the battle front, and Howard F. West, stricken by disease, died in camp, and to those heroic men who survived the perils of the war to wear upon their breasts the emblems of their devotion to their country and its flag.

And now, as an act of justice to these heroes, and their cause, I shall touch upon some of the phases of the war, interesting and instructive, as they fall within my point of view.

It was the fault of the imperial power of Germany, if in the light of destiny it be a fault, that we, as a Nation, engaged in the war at all.

Notwithstanding our existing obligations to France, we observed a strict neutrality toward all the belligerents for the first two years of the war, and this would have continued to the end if the German vandal had confined his hostilities on land and sea to his allied enemies and had been content to let America alone; but being in, we bore it, that this ancient enemy of mankind might well beware of us.

In discussing the different phases of the war I am forever haunted with a vision of the fatal mistake that was made in the beginning and at the end.

The sequel will always show that we hesitated too long in declaring existing war between our own and the Imperial Government of Germany, and it was the most disastrous blunder of all the ages for the civil powers involved in not rejecting the armistice with all the contempt it deserved and in not permitting the allied and American Armies, victorious at the Rhine, to end the war as they desired, at Berlin, on the spot of its origin, and upon the immediate and unconditional surrender of the entire personnel of the German Army and Navy, including the reigning monarch himself, the leading vandal of them all.

Then, in the orderly sequence of time and place, the victorious nations would have secured upon terms in harmony with the conditions of the surrender in treaties of amity and peace the blood-bought fruits of the world-wide war.

And now, as a more cheerful point of view, let me bring back your memories to that incident that graced the march of the American Army, on its way to the French front, to be seen and forever known in its pause before the tomb of Lafayette, a hero of the American Revolution, just long enough for Pershing to say, in an epigram of four words, unequaled in their depth of meaning, in all the languages of the world, "Lafayette, we are here."

When Tennyson placed his picture in verse upon a wall of his palace of art, of an uncaged tiger in the act of rolling to and fro the heads and crowns of kings, be intended it as prophetic of the downfall of despotic powers, and if we read aright the meaning of this poet his prophecy has already been fulfilled in a war that has shaken the earth with its vibrations and played havoc with the "heads and crowns of kings."

The Hohenzollern, the house of Hapsburg, the long line of Russian Czars, ancient houses of arbitrary power and special privilege, built in the blood of the common people, have gone down beyond the power of resurrection, to meet in name and history the retribution of eternal justice.

It was on this line of destructive power that the allied and American Armies achieved the crowning victory of the war.

No human power within the circle of the globe, but these combined armies of the Lord—allied and American—could have stayed the deadly march of the German Empire in arms, skilled in all the methods of atrocious warfare, and well advanced toward the final conquest of their coveted prize, rich in the spoils of war.

Time alone can bring to view the full volume of the mighty work these armies accomplished, the hardships they endured, to rescue the oppressed of war-worn Europe from the iron rule of despotic power and to place within their grasp in popular forms of government, their inalienable right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

No greater legacy than this could these combined armies leave to the human race; yet, notwithstanding the glory of the victory and its far-reaching benefit to mankind, the enlightened conscience of the world stands in open revolt against the organized system of destructive life and property by which it was accomplished.

And now the wisest and the best from every land who come to voice with us the merits of "disarmament" are the welcome heralds of a cause that holds in its embrace the common welfare that should attend all Governments in civilized life, and stronger than ever before in the faith and fervent hope that the crowning hour of time is not far off when the war drum throbs no longer and peace enthroned in power supreme throughout the earth shall under universal law finally adjust all conflicts and contentions that may occur within the world-wide family of States and nations.

Nor is this all that makes for peace on earth.

An abiding trust in the overpowering rule of the Infinite can plainly see the star of destiny arise from out the fleeting clouds of war, a harbinger of peace to guide a weary world at last to freedom.

We may not live to see the day, but the earth will brighten in the ray of the good time coming.

It was my privilege a few days since to attend a ceremony kindred to this, under the auspices of the American Legion, in the neighboring town of Candia, on the ground already consecrated to the memory of the author of the imperishable lines, "Let me live in the house by the side of the road and be a friend to man." And there, looking to future ages and posterity, we planted a tree to tell in its growth, strength, and beauty the story of the faithful service and tragic death of the brave young soldier who left his loving home to join the American expedition under Pershing in upholding the standard of a righteous cause in a foreign land.

And there on that day we enshrined this house by the side of the road, to stand in the eye of the world as one of the meccas in the march of human liberty; and we bless with reverential devotion this birthplace-home of the gifted poet and father, Sam Walter Foss, and of his brave young son, Saxton C. Foss, who is calmly sleeping over there beyond the seas in the silent city of the world's immortal and heroic dead, where French art, love, and gratitude will raise a monument into the gaze of the generations yet to be inscribed with this hero's name and sacred to his memory. And on this consecrated spot, at the house by the side of the road, I said that day, "If there be on this earthly sphere a gift, an offering, Heaven holds dear, 'tis the last libation that Liberty draws from the hearts that bleed and break in her cause."

No pen of history can ever write the tragic story of this war. No human eye can see and no human mind can begin to take in its immensities.

In the loss of life the one we commemorate to-day is only a single type of the millions that shared his fate.

France alone suffered the loss of 3,000,000 men, the bravest of her brave, either killed outright in the storm of battle or totally disabled for life.

Take this loss as a unit for calculation by which to determine, if you can, the aggregate loss of all the belligerents throughout the war and you will find an immeasurable void in the census of the human family that can never be supplied.

But for all these heroic souls that fought and died for the eternal right on that immortal battle line—

There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore;
And bright in Heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forever more.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. T. FRANK APPLEBY,
OF NEW JERSEY,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 16, 1921.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, having joined with you in the impressive ceremonies of November 10, 11, and 12, attendant upon the burial of the unknown soldier, and the opening of the conference for the limiting of armament, ceremonies that will go down in history as the most significant of the ages, I feel that it would not be inappropriate for us at this time to compare notes and express, in so far as we are able, the sentiments of our constituents as voicing the people's hopes for the success of the arms conference.

This conference is absolutely unique in that it is the only international gathering whose conclusions promise to be materially, if not wholly, influenced by public opinion.

As Members of Congress representing over 100,000,000 people, it should be our privilege and duty to say that we are of one accord in the aims and principles of this conference. At its opening session practically every Member of both the House and Senate was present. Never was the public opinion of an entire nation so completely represented anywhere. Approximately 1,150,000,000 persons were represented in the presence of the various delegates. Representatives of four republics, two empires, and three kingdoms were gathered around the council table; and to them this presence in the council chamber in a body of the Congress of the United States, said to these delegates that a war that had shattered the political and economic structure of Europe and left the United States the richest and most powerful country in the world had left no love of war as war, no lust of conquest, no dreams of overlordship.

President Harding's noble address, and still more the unexpectedly radical program of naval diminishment which Secretary Hughes submitted to the conference and to the nations, gave proof of our whole-hearted commitment to armament limitation. Is it possible that anyone of us will ever forget the spontaneous and unanimous applause that greeted the President's statement:

I can speak officially only for the United States. One hundred million frankly want less of armament and none of war.

And in these words he frankly told the assembled delegates that the people of America are sick at heart of war and its horrors, and are demanding that something be done to win the world away from war and its terrible toll of life and wealth.

I think it is safe to say that the opening speech of Secretary Hughes, as chairman of the conference, astonished the world, but a thorough reading and digest of this speech must convince the most skeptical that the United States has gone into this conference with a sincerity that is unquestioned and that our delegates are prepared for action. I think I am justified in saying further that the boldness and candor of his proposals captured everybody. It could hardly be otherwise, for in no sentence of his entire remarks did he ask from any other nation what the United States does not contemplate for itself. His proposal was founded on justice to every interest involved and embodied to an extraordinary degree the peaceful aspirations of the American people.

Mr. Speaker, we have reached the turn in the road. The central fact about which the Washington conference now revolves is the leadership of the United States in the task of promoting world peace. No one who witnessed the opening of the conference or who has sounded the foreign visitors can have failed to receive the impression that the nations, great and small, look to the United States to take the initiative. And is it a display of too great an optimism to say at this early date that this conference, the hope of civilization, begun under such highly favorable auspices, both of leadership and common conscience, may through a mutual understanding of national interests and necessities reconcile all national aims and meet the desire of all the nations concerned, which is peace?

Failure of the conference is unthinkable. An adverse outcome would be intolerable and those responsible for it would be repudiated and everlastingly condemned. Frankly, I personally predict the adoption of the program proposed by our delegates. Two predominating reasons command this statement. For the first, future wars must be prevented; and for the second, Governments must be saved from bankruptcy. The plan proposed by President Harding and Secretary Hughes, as a beginning, has provoked a degree of enthusiasm not only among the people of this country but among the delegates of Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Portugal, Japan, and China present at the conference even beyond the hopes of the Government itself.

This fact is established by the personal expressions of the delegates, the comments of the foreign press, as well as the flood of comment that has begun to descend upon Congress. The tenor of these communications are all the same, and justify the statement that no action taken by the Government designed to improve world conditions has ever aroused such widespread indorsement. A reading of the proposal indicates that apparently it is far more than a 10-year holiday that is projected, coupled with immediate heavy reduction of the fleets of the three great powers. Beyond that is an equally candid and direct suggestion for continuing agreement to limit the size of battle fleets permanently. That is what the Secretary's naval replacement plan amounts to. The 10-year building holiday would enable the United States, Great Britain, and Japan to effect an annual saving of about $1,300,000,000—$500,000,000 each by the United States and Great Britain and $300,000,000 by Japan. Even to those who cherish no ideals it has become evident during the past three or four years that if nations continue the present enormous expenditures for war preparations they will go into bankruptcy, and the bankruptcy of nations would be a catastrophe to civilization. American business men have the largest possible stake in the conference. Its success is essential to a revival of prosperity while its failure would be the greatest conceivable calamity in world affairs. The economic argument is perfect and complete. The nations are reduced almost to chaos, and even this country, with its unbounded resources, is suffering grievously, not only in its foreign markets but in all of its domestic trade. Eight billions of dollars are being spent annually by the nations involved on war material. The benefits which would be derived by reason of all the nations living under peaceful conditions as compared with military conflicts are beyond calculation. If means for the firm establishment and maintenance of peace can be found and generally assented to, it will mark an epoch of the greatest business prosperity as well as the largest measure of happines that the world has ever witnessed.

The eyes of the world are turned toward this conference. In it the hope of humanity is centered. On it the fate of civilization rests. Never in the history of mankind has so much power been concentrated in a single group of men. May courage be given to these delegates who represent the world's hopes to carry out fair and just decisions, the power to withstand pressure from all reactionary interests, and the vision to perceive the world's great need, and to our own delegates who represent the United States in this conference may there be given spiritual insight and the dauntless courage to lay the firm and solid foundation of a new world order worthy of America's history and America's glorious traditions.

The Unknown Dead—The Supreme Sacrifice.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LOUIS C. CRAMTON, OF MICHIGAN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, November 10, 1921.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the unknown dead. The fate of those soldiers gives them a peculiar hold upon our hearts. I have felt it each time I have visited a burial place of our Nation's defenders, whether at old Chalmette, at Gettysburg, at Winchester, Arlington, or above Cierges, where the Thirty-second passed on their way to Fismes. In French soil I saw the score of rude wooden crosses marking the burial place of those who had fallen a few days before, and among them were those that carried only the word "unidentified." In our older national cemeteries in our own land are the rows and rows of simple, square, white stone markers, each without name or identification, only a number which enumerates but does not identify the unknown dead.

Theirs was the supreme sacrifice. They gave all, and without return. For them no one carried the last word to waiting wife, mother, or sweetheart, nor the blessing of the father to children at home. Theirs must wait weary and desolate weeks and months for news of the hero, and in many cases never know definitely and positively his end. There are those now sleeping in heroes' graves who gave their supremest all and whose military records here are closed with the charge of desertion; even the certainty of their heroism is denied those who gave them to the world in its need.

Surely this was the supreme sacrifice, and I have asked this permission to place these remarks in the RECORD that I might place here that wonderful tribute to the dead who fought the world's battle of democracy in the World War, "The Supreme Sacrifice," by John S. Arkwright. Since permission was granted me I have learned this great hymn of tribute is to be sung following the address of the President at the amphitheater service November 11, and am sure no more fitting hymn could have been selected.

"The Supreme Sacrifice" was written by John S. Arkwright, for 12 years a member of the British House of Commons, and was first published in the late summer of 1917. It was sung in Westminster Abbey, August 5, 1917, and the following year, at the historic service at St. Margarets, Westminster, upon the fourth anniversary of the entry of Britain in the war, when King and Queen and both Houses of Parliament went to service to ask divine aid in the great struggle. This hymn was to me the most impressive feature, a simple and eloquent tribute. The music generally used is by Rev. G. Harris, rector of Colwall, Herefordshire, Mr. Arkwright's native county. The lines follow:

O valiant hearts, who to your glory came Through dust of conflict and through battle flame;
Tranquil you lie, your knightly virtue proved,
Your memory hallowed in the land you loved.

Proudly you gathered, rank on rank to war,
As who had heard God's message from afar;
All you had hoped for, all you had, you gave
To save mankind—yourselves you scorned to save.

Splendid you passed, the great surrender made,
Into the light that nevermore shall fade;
Deep your contentment in that blest abode,
Who wait the last clear trumpet call of God.

Long years ago, as earth lay dark and still,
Rose a loud cry upon a lonely hill,
While in the frailty of our human clay
Christ, our Redeemer, passed the selfsame way.

Still stands His cross from that dread hour to this
Like some bright star above the dark abyss;
Still, through the veil, the victor's pitying eyes
Look down to bless our lesser Calvaries.

These were His servants, in His steps they trod
Following through death the martyr'd Son of God;
Victor He rose; victorious, too, shall rise
They who have drunk His cup of sacrifice.

O risen Lord, O Shepherd of our dead,
Whose cross has bought them and whose staff has led—
In glorious hope their proud and sorrowing land
Commits her children to Thy gracious hand. Amen.

OF

HON. WYNNE F. CLOUSE,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 19, 1921.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Speaker, upon first reading the bill now under consideration I was inclined to oppose its enactment—not upon the theory that I was opposed to the objects sought to be attained, but because I did not then feel that the bill was broad enough in its scope to afford the relief so essential to the welfare of the Nation and indispensable to the happiness of its people.

I did not think then, nor do I think now, that the bill is as perfect as it might have been made, nor do I think it carries a sufficient appropriation to carry on the work in the manner that it should be carried on; but I do think and am thoroughly convinced that it is a step in the right direction, and in the hope that in the thorough and efficient administration of the act will be found justification for our action here to-day I shall happily, and do happily, accept this opportunity of giving the measure my unstinted support.

In the discussion of matters of legislation by this body it is not only the privilege but the duty, not only permissible but proper, that every Member express freely his or her views thereon, and under the same rule which I grant to others I shall and do reserve to myself the right to discuss this question in candor and frankness, according as the facts have impressed me with the imperative necessity so to do. In the long, extended debate of the opposition to this bill I have in patience listened for a reason, persuasive or otherwise, why this bill should not become a law, but until this minute, in the very closing hours of debate, I have been unable to hear but two reasons, or, better still, excuses, why it should not receive the sanction of this House. The first of these excuses, flimsy though it may be, is: That the measure is paternalistic or socialistic in its character; and, secondly, that it is an unjustifiable invasion of the rights of the several States. I shall, therefore, address myself to the criticisms of the bill in the order in which I have mentioned them.

Is the bill objectionable on account of the fact that it is paternalistic or socialistic? I think not. If it is, then every appropriation that has been made in the last 50 years for the maintenance of an army, for the building of a navy, for the improvement and canalization of rivers, the dredging of canals, the building of highways, the eradication of diseases of cattle, horses, and hogs; the elimination of the boll weevil so disastrous and destructive of cotton production on the plantations of the South, have been and are now socialistic in character since every section of the country is taxed to raise the money necessary to carry on this work in particular localities of the country. I think gentlemen are confused and are making much ado about nothing, apparently oblivious of the fact that this Government is vitally interested in the general welfare of its whole people, its commerce, its transportation, its defense, and lastly, its prosperity. When our forefathers framed the Constitution of the United States they set out certain purposes which were to be accomplished by that great document which Mr. Gladstone has described as the greatest document that ever fell from the brain of man in any particular period of the history of mankind. Among other things, they provided for a Congress, prescribed its duties and defined its power, and it might be well for gentlemen to refresh their minds as to the provisions of section 8, Article I, which reads as follows:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States * * * Congress, therefore, has the undoubted authority to lay taxes upon the people of my State or your State for the purpose of providing for the common defense of the country. In like manner it has the power to appropriate money to advance the general welfare of the Nation. Were it not so, I ask you in all seriousness, how can you fortify our coasts and protect our cities from the devastating hand of a foreign foe? Without these fortifications could you lie down to-night with any assurance of the morrow? With any feeling of security as to your life, liberty, and property? No; you could not; and on account of the very nature of things it is not only wise but expedient that Congress be given the power to appropriate for the defense and general welfare of our people. No State could provide for the defense of itself, but the Government through the cooperation of the people is able to act for all and ever stand ready to protect her citizenship wherever they may be.

In all the discussion in opposition to the bill not one man has raised his voice or challenged the fact that the one thing more vitally affecting the general welfare of this Republic is its manhood—the physical strength and intellectual ingenuity of its man power. I speak without the fear of a successful contradiction when I say that it is beyond the power of man to even suggest another element as essential to the preservation of our ideals as a nation or to its prosperity and perpetuity as that of its man power. If, then, this fact be axiomatic, is it not our duty to see that every American babe be brought into this world free from the handicaps or prenatal inattention, as well as the alarming dangers of mortality due the utter lack of knowledge on the part of the mother as to its proper care and attention? Aside from this view what man of you would stand out to deny the innocent babe its right to life, or by your vote suffer thousands of expectant mothers to die a premature death for lack of proper care and attention?

Ah, but some one says we are encroaching on the rights of the several States. I deny it. Under this bill no State is required to accept the benefits, but does so only of its own free will and volition. I wish that the bill did make it compulsory, for it would, indeed, be the happiest day of my life to know that I had been one cog in the wheel of humanity that saved the life of a precious mother or made her journey, so to speak, into and through the valley of the shadow of death less painful and less hazardous.

We have heard the old, old cry of extravagance of some who strangle at a gnat and swallow a camel. If you can afford to levy tribute on the taxpayers of America to eradicate hog cholera or to eliminate the boll weevil from the plantations of the South; if you could tax our people to feed, in times of peace, the starving hordes of Europe, then be men of courage and in the name of Almighty God and American motherhood, let us forever remove the dangers of childbirth to the end that we may promote the welfare of the human race.

Think of and compare, if you please, the enormous sums of money that was spent by this Government for war during the recent years of 1918, 1919, and 1920. I give you only the specific appropriations for specific purposes, to wit:

Support of Army	$273,046,322.59	$10,225,478,312.91	$772,324,877.50
Naval Service	517,273,892.08	1,573,468,415.84	616,096,838.88
War and expense	9,378,469,821.84	4,315,272,038.36	284,858,834.14
Total	10,168,789,946.42	16,114,218,767.11	1,673,280,550.42

RECAPITULATION.

1918	$10,168,789,946.42
1919	16,114,218,767.11

After appropriating the stupendous sum of more than $27,000,000,000 you taxed the people of the United States $100,000,000 to feed the starving hordes of Europe in 1920. Since when have you become so zealous of the Treasury that you refuse to appropriate the meager sum of $5,000,000 to save the lives of the mothers of American babes who will be the statesmen and rulers of to-morrow?

I have no patience with that argument you offer to the effect that expectant mothers will not appreciate the intrusion of nurse and physician in the awful ordeal of motherhood. This is but a barrage to cloud, to conceal the hideous onslaughts of attack. This bill does not make the service compulsory with the expectant mother, but leaves it entirely at her option. Of course there are some women in the world to-day that would spurn with haughty contempt the proffered advice and assistance of a nurse and physician in a case like this, but it is they in the main that spurn the very idea of motherhood, choosing rather to suffer the plague and afflictions of a "poodle-dog" companion through life to the angelic and happy state of motherhood. For this type and class we hold no brief nor ask no aid. But those that spurn the foul fumes of the filthy fist and adore the lofty state of motherhood, for them we plead. It is to them we give the glory, for upon them rests the stability of this Republic in the ages yet to come. [Applause.]

Albert Cohen, Youngest American to Die in Battle in France.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, November 10, 1921.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon thousands of our people are passing at the rate of a hundred to one hundred and fifty per minute through the Rotunda of the Capitol paying their last tribute of respect to the unknown American who made the supreme sacrifice for the Republic.

All over this land, and properly so, our fellow Americans are thinking of the brave men who answered the country's call, never to come back again to their dear ones, the same as they left our shores.

It is, therefore, fitting to call attention to-day to the fact that the youngest soldier who served with the American Expeditionary Forces in France and to die while in battle was Albert Cohen, whose parents reside at the present time in Memphis, Tenn. Albert Cohen on the 1st day of May, 1917, volunteered for service. He was barely 13 years and 6 months old when he donned the uniform. Temporarily he was assigned to duty at Fort Oglethorpe. In the early part of 1918 he was assigned to Company H, Twenty-sixth Infantry, and ordered to France. He was part of that outfit. Young in years, but beloved by all of the men and officers of his company, he participated in all of the heavy fighting of his regiment, including the Meuse-Argonne offensive. He won the admiration of all his "buddies" in the regiment who saw him stand up in that most trying ordeal with the Twenty-sixth Infantry. It was early on the morning of October 5, 1918, that he was killed by machine-gun fire while facing the enemy. Thus at the early age of 15 he gave up his life for those high ideals which he embodied.

It has been said of him that in school he loved to repeat Nathan Hale's lines: "That he had only one regret, and that was that he had but one life to give for his country." Little did young Cohen know when he was declaiming these words that he himself would soon be called upon to make the sacrifice for the Republic at the early age of 15.

Armistice Day came and the parents of young Cohen believed that they would soon see him home. Three weeks after Armistice Day the War Department advised them that their Albert was "missing in action." Later his company commander wrote the parents telling them how gallantly young Cohen had stood up, fought, and died for the United States.

No words of mine can teach the lesson which the heroic action of this young lad has taught, not merely by the enlistment but by his bravery at the front.

Posterity will long remember and generations yet unborn, in years to come will be told the story of how Albert Cohen, the baby soldier, did his share to win the war. It would be well therefore for all of us to learn, remember, and recollect at all times that the war was won not by any one creed, race, or religion in our midst, but that all alike contributed their share to make victory possible. Albert Cohen exemplified the true American, and if he could speak at this hour he would say to real patriotic Americans to judge men and women solely by their service to our country in its hour of need.

Federal Aid for Good Roads.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LON A. SCOTT,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 1, 1921.

Mr. SCOTT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the opportunity to record my vote in behalf of an appropriation for the improvement of the public highways of our country is a privilege for which I have sincerely longed.

Few pieces of legislation have been more closely followed by the thinking public and will meet with such universal approval than this measure which provides for $75,000,000 to be appropriated for post roads. If I should be asked what objection, if any, I had to this legislation, it is possible that I would point to certain provisions which, in my judgment, might be improved. Should you ask me my chief objection, my prompt reply would be that the amount appropriated is too small.

However, Mr. Speaker, I have long since learned that the best of legislation, like the best of legislators, is seldom perfect, even though conceived by honest minds with noblest ambitions.

This legislation, with all its imperfections, is too wise to be disapproved. In the future Congressmen or Senators may propose amendments by adding to, clarifying, or removing objections. Let us speed its final passage. An anxious country awaits the signature of our great President to this measure.

In the passage of this measure the people will have realized that the party they swept into power in 1920 makes promises to be kept. Our national platform pledged Federal aid for post roads. The final passage of this legislation marks the fulfillment of that sacred pledge.

Many reasons can be advanced for this character of legislation. The question of transportation is second to few of the many great problems now entertaining the minds of the progressive thinkers of the Nation. The automobile and trucks are wending their ways to the remotest of the rural districts, thus we hear the cry of the tillers of the soil for better roads, that they may speed the products of their farm to the market. Improved roads mean not only a saving of time but a saving of expense of transportation of farm products, and in many instances more profit to producer and less cost to consumer. Good roads mean that they who till the soil and feed the world may consolidate their schools and their churches, their industrial interests, and improve their homes.

Legislation that will contribute to the happiness, convenience, and prosperity of the great rural communities of the United States is worthy of support of not only the Representatives who hail from the rural districts but of those who come from the centers of population; for after all the large cities of the Nation which are most prosperous are those whose highways leading into the surrounding territories are most improved and penetrate farthest into the heart of the great agricultural districts.

The question about which there is a diversity of opinion is how can the desired improvements for public roads be speedily attained, and which is the less expensive method. We will always have different ideas as to which policy or method might be most successfully pursued, yet we can not afford to delay this progressive movement, even though mistakes and errors may be made. The greatest mistake would be to halt this great work of road building. The people though burdened with taxes heaped upon their shoulders by the horrors and extravagances of the world's greatest war will be glad to learn that Congress has appropriated $75,000,000 of their money to be used to improve the roads they travel.

The policy of Federal aid for roads, in my judgment, is a wise one to which I expect to give my support as long as I have the honor to remain a Member of the National Congress.

State Aid for Port Development in Alabama.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN McDUFFIE,

OF ALABAMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, November 18, 1921.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, several days ago, upon the request of my colleague on the Rivers and Harbors Committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE], unanimous consent was given me to extend in the RECORD the remarks I made before the Legislature of Alabama, in joint session, October 10, 1921.

Ordinarily I would not extend in the RECORD remarks of my own other than those made upon the floor of the House. In this instance, however, the remarks deal with the question of State aid for the development of the port of Mobile, as well as the development and utilization of the inland waterways of the State of Alabama. The river system of Alabama is one of the largest in the United States and has wonderful possibilities. The speech therefore touches upon a subject in which not only the State of Alabama is interested but the Federal Government is also directly interested. Congress has appropriated up to date, since the adoption of the original projects for the development and maintenance of the port of Mobile and the rivers of Alabama, more than $22,000,000.

My information from the engineers is to the effect that the rivers of the United States as a whole are carrying more tonnage to-day than ever before in their history. While this is not true of the rivers of Alabama, yet it is gratifying to all who are interested in the inland waterways of the country to know that the people generally are beginning to appreciate the value and possibilities of water transportation as well as the necessity for modern port equipment. With the proper development of the port of Mobile, the full benefits to be derived from the use of our great river system will be realized.

The policy of the War Department and the Congress now is to aid especially those communities where there is a willingness to cooperate with the Government in the development of rivers and harbors. The Congress therefore encourages local cooperation. The question of amending the constitution of Alabama so that the State may lend its credit for the development of its seaport is now being discussed in Alabama. It is a question in which not only the first congressional district, which I have the honor to represent, is most vitally interested, but the State as a whole and the Federal Government as well. Therefore, I am taking advantage of the permission given me by the House to extend in the RECORD my remarks upon the subject:

MR. M'DUFFIE'S REMARKS BEFORE THE LEGISLATURE OF ALABAMA IN JOINT SESSION AT MONTGOMERY, ALA., OCTOBER 10, 1921.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives, I thank you for the very great honor you have done me, but it is with no little degree of timidity that I have appeared before you. I realize that I am in the presence of men with brains and vision. Before me are some of those at whose feet I sat as the "baby" member of this house nearly 15 years ago. I hope you realize that I am not taking myself so seriously as to feel I possess the ability to instruct you, nor would I presume to tell you what your duty is with reference to any measure now pending before you.

Coming as I do from the tidewater section of the State and representing in the National Legislature the great seaport of Alabama, I am deeply and primarily interested in that measure you are now considering, involving the resubmission to the people of Alabama the question of whether or not they will amend our constitution so that the State may lend its credit for the proper development of Alabama's only seaport, the natural outlet or gateway to all the busy markets of the world for the products of our fields and factories.

In my judgment, the most progressive steps ever taken by an Alabama Legislature were taken by you in submitting to our people the port and road amendments. You deserve the commendation of all Alabamians who believe in the progress of our State and the maximum development of all those resources which nature has placed at our disposal.

There comes a time in the life of every State and nation, and even in the life of the individual, when opportunities must be seized if that State or nation or individual wishes to progress. That time has come in the life of Alabama. Opportunities for greater prosperity throughout the State are now knocking at our doors. The hour has struck for us. If we wish to bring within our doors the prosperity which is practically within our grasp, or if we expect to be in the advance guard of progress, the time has come for this State to step forward.

Industrial and commercial development is going on at a rapid pace in all the States about us. We are living in a day of rapid motion. Rapid transportation by motor vehicle and rail has brought the keenest competition in commerce, while the great ports of the country are racing for their share of the business of the world. Alabama, with her splendid resources and wonderful potential possibilities, can not afford to mark time while her sister States are marching on to greater development and prosperity.

No State amongst all the United States has been more lavishly endowed at nature's hands than ours. Here we have a climate unexcelled on earth and a soil so ready to respond to the scientific touch of the modern farmer. We have the largest river system of any State in the South, and second only in the whole country. It is estimated that along our rivers we have standing and growing more valuable hardwood than in any other State, with the possible exception of Oregon. Beneath our soil is deposited enough cement rock to belt the landed surface of the earth with a highway 100 feet wide probably three times. In the Birmingham district alone we have more than 16,000,000,000 tons of iron ore, according to experts, sufficient to supply the present production for nearly 200 years. Our finished steel, as good as can be produced if not the best, is extensively used not only in the structure of the finest buildings but for the construction of railroads in the Occident and the Orient. Steel is manufactured in the Birmingham district more cheaply than it can be produced anywhere else on earth.

We are mining in Alabama to-day nearly 20,000,000 tons of coal annually and we have hardly scratched the surface. Within our borders are greater possibilities for water-power development than in any other State, with the possible exception of California. Yonder in the beautiful valley of the Tennessee River is the most wonderful project of its kind in all the world—Muscle Shoals—which we hope, and I believe, the Government will yet turn over to Henry Ford.

Down at Mobile is Alabama's port, your port, situated at the mouth of the longest canalized river in the world, reaching as it does into the very heart of those deposits of coal, iron, and cement rock, which geologists say are inexhaustible. That port is Alabama's doorway, the natural outlet and inlet to and from the four corners of the earth. By reason of the lack of modern warehousing and freight-handling facilities the door is only ajar. We must throw that door wide open by the installation of these facilities if the people of Alabama are to have better and less expensive commercial intercourse with the outside world.

If you will develop the port of Mobile, Alabama will furnish the cheapest coal market in the world. Develop your port and Alabama will fix the price of steel for the world! Develop the port and you will have at Mobile a nearer and better cotton market than New Orleans. Develop the port of Mobile and hundreds of new industries with thousands of newcomers will spring up throughout the State. With the proper development of the seaport of Alabama nothing but the hand of Providence can stay her onward march to prosperity.

If Alabamians will but reflect upon the location of their port, its ever-pressing need for development, and the prosperity to flow into every section of the State by reason of port development, I believe they will vote at the next general election to adopt the amendment, if you gentlemen see fit to submit it, which I hope and feel sure you will do.

I am not unmindful, gentlemen, that our people did not pass favorably upon the port amendment. While I do not know the views of all Alabamians, the more I have heard the amendment discussed since the election the more I am convinced that their action was the result of a misunderstanding or a lack of information as to its merits.

Amongst the arguments used against the adoption of the amendment were:

That it would result in additional burdens of taxation and that we and our children through the coming years would have to bear these burdens for the benefit of only one locality of the State.

That it was not known or indicated what amount of money was needed for the improvements nor who would supervise the expenditure of the money and have control of the operation and management of the port.

That the improvements, if made, should be made by the people of Mobile, without the aid of the State's credit.

That it was the beginning of a policy on the part of the State to use its treasury for internal improvements generally.

That it is wrong to change the constitution for any purpose.

If you will bear with me, I will briefly discuss these arguments which perplexed and misled many of our people.

Gentlemen, I belong to that school who believe that the happiest people are those least burdened with taxation. I say to you frankly if I thought the adoption of the port amendment would result in adding to the tax burdens of the people of Alabama I would not be heard to ask you to resubmit it for their consideration. On the other hand, I would ask you not to do so. Having seen State aid for port development successfully tried out by other States, knowing, as I do, that Alabamians, with their splendid resources, can accomplish as much or even more than the people of Louisiana, who with less advantages and resources have made New Orleans one of the first ports of the world, without additional taxation, and believing as I do that the scheme would not add one penny to the taxes of our people, I heartily indorse a resubmission of the amendment and favor its adoption.

The port of New Orleans is to-day probably the third greatest port on earth. It is the greatest export cotton market in the world. Why? Because the people of Louisiana, a State without a river system comparable to ours, without any tonnage of coal, iron, or cement, a State with less tonnage, smaller in area and with less wealth and less population than Alabama, caught the vision of State aid for port development.

The State of Louisiana has amended its constitution and authorized the board of port commissioners at New Orleans to issue bonds in the sum of $13,750,000 up to date. The mayor of that city advised me yesterday that the port charges, the charges for handling freight, and storage charges have made the port more than selfsustaining. The board began the retirement of their bonds last year after paying every interest note as it fell due, and now have nearly $2,000,000 surplus, an increasing fund with which to pay off other bonds as they fall due. All this has been done, if you please, without the additional cost of a single cent to the taxpayers of Louisiana. Can Alabama afford to stand still while Louisiana, with our neighboring port, our chief competitor, moves on to great accomplishments?

The scheme of port aid has been so successful at New Orleans an additional issue of seventeen millions in bonds has been voted for the construction of a great industrial canal connecting the city of New Orleans with Lake Pontchartrain, giving a nearer outlet to deep water. At Mobile there is no need for an industrial canal, nor would we need so large an amount of money for our development as was necessary for New Orleans, where the city is below the level of the water.

The port of Mobile is situated at the mouth of 1,500 miles of navigable water. It is nearer the Panama Canal than any other great port on the south Atlantic seaboard or the Gulf. It has rail connection with and is nearer St. Louis, Chicago, Memphis, and Kansas City than New Orleans. It is only 30 miles from the deep waters of the Gulf, while New Orleans is 110. It is the natural outlet for products of the Mississippi Valley. It has been estimated that the harbor of Mobile has safe and deep anchorage enough to accommodate at one time all the commercial ships of any one nation in the world. Having all these natural advantages over the other ports of the country, if our port is provided with ample and modern port facilities, it should easily become one of the first ports of the world.

The question naturally arises in the minds of the voters, Where will we get the revenue or money with which to pay off this bonded indebtedness without involving the credit of the State? From investigations I have made it appears that investments in improved port facilities in all the great ports of the country have been paying ones. The facilities pay for themselves. The charges made upon vessels for use of the port, the warehousing or storage charge, and the charges for handling freight and other charges incident to handling of vessels and their cargoes will provide the funds with which to pay the bonds issued for port improvement, without calling upon the people of the State for any appropriations from the State treasury. If this has been done elsewhere, why can it not be done at Mobile? If it can be done, it should be done, and the fear of additional taxation is not well founded.

On the west coast the people in the States of California, Washington, and Oregon have voted to amend their constitutions permitting their great ports to issue bonds for port improvement. The State of Massachusetts has even appropriated out of the State treasury more than $9,000,000 for the port of Boston, while Baltimore has adopted a program calling for the expenditure of $50,000,000 on her harbor. I am not prepared to-day to tell you what each coast-line State has done with reference to port improvements, but I do know that now, more than ever before, those States which possess harbors or outlets to the sea are lending their best efforts for port improvement. They realize that their prosperity is measured largely by their accessibility to the markets of the world.

The life of every country is its commerce, and the life of the commerce of to-day is dispatch. The ships carrying the commerce of the seas are seeking those ports where the greatest dispatch may be had and the best service given. Does it not then behoove the people of Alabama to make their port such a port as will bring to us our share of the commerce of the world?

The question of the port amendment, gentlemen, is not a selfish proposition in which only the people of Mobile are interested. We are not asking that the State's credit be extended for the sole benefit of Mobile. Every section of the State is involved. Every farmer, including the farmer who raises foodstuffs and the farmer who raises cotton, it matters not where he lives nor how far removed from the port he may be, has an interest in the proper development of the port of Mobile.

The development of the port means the springing up of additional industries, bringing into the State thousands of people who will make Alabama their permanent home. No one will deny that the building up of Birmingham, soon to become the greatest city in the South, brought prosperity to every section of the State. Every farmer knows that the more people we have in the State the better are his opportunities to sell his foodstuffs. The nearer he is to the market the more he can realize from the sale of his products. The more industries we have the more people there are to be fed.

The cotton farmer is interested in the proper development of his port, because he would have a nearer and better export market for his cotton. Why should he have to send his cotton several hundred miles for export when he could find always a ready market in his own State? Every farmer knows that he receives for his cotton every year a price that is based largely upon the export market. Even the farmer who sells directly to the mills is paid accordingly. We export about 60 per cent of the cotton raised in America. The more expense attached to the transportation and exportation of our cotton the less the buyer can afford to pay us for it.

With large, modern warehousing facilities our cotton could be shipped to the port, there to be kept free from weather, stored at less cost, and insured at instance of the State at less expense than it now costs anywhere in the State. With modern freight handling facilities that cotton could be loaded on shipboard at less than half the present cost. The cotton merchant at Montgomery, Dothan, or in north Alabama would find it cheaper to ship his cotton to Mobile, or the buyer for export at these prices would ship his cotton to Mobile in preference to other ports for the reason that the expense of storing and handling would be reduced.

With modern warehouses under State control the individual farmer could ship his cotton to his own seaport and receive for it a warehouse receipt upon which he could more readily draw money from any bank than he could if that cotton were stored at some inland point, carrying heavy insurance and storage charges. The cotton farmer therefore is as much interested in the development of this port as the lumberman, the producer of naval stores, coal, iron, and steel, because it means for him better and cheaper transportation for his product as well as general prosperity throughout the State.

The transportation problem is probably the greatest one now confronting the American people. The necessity for utilizing the waterways of the country was demonstrated during the war, when it was also shown that our transportation troubles were intensified by the policy of routing a large part of the tonnage from the West and the Mississippi Valley through a few great ports of the East rather than have it follow its natural channels through the Gulf and South Atlantic ports.

We can never hope to realize the full benefits to be derived from the utilization of the waterways of Alabama until we so equip our port that it will attract the business of the world. I am sure that you are aware of the fact that to-day the merchant at Meridian, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Montgomery, and Birmingham can now ship goods, or have goods shipped to him, using jointly the railroad and the waterways, at 80 per cent of the cost of the all-rail haul. Goods may be now shipped from New York to Mobile at 80 per cent of the all-rail haul. These goods should reach the merchants in the territory embraced in the Warrior River rate zone at less cost than they are shipped by rail. This means cheaper goods to the consumer, and you know the consumer always pays the freight. I am informed that upon the completion of the terminals at Demopolis, Ala., sugar may be shipped via Mobile and Demopolis to Selma and Meridian at a saving of $100 per carload. This should mean cheaper sugar for the consumer in the territory surrounding those points.

I mention these facts to give you some idea of the benefits our people should derive from the proper development and use of our river systems and the port of Mobile.

The Congress of the United States is committed to the policy of developing and encouraging water transportation, and the Government and we are now trying to demonstrate the feasible and practical utilization of the Warrior River. I am glad to inform you that the Mississippi-Warrior system is now operating at a good profit. The Federal Government has appropriated up to date approximately $23,000,000 for the development and care of the rivers of Alabama and the harbor at Mobile. Is it not high time that we show our faith in ourselves by showing a spirit of cooperation? The policy of Congress now is to help those communities which help themselves. If your delegation in Congress are able to show the Congress that the people of Alabama are in earnest and mean business and have determined to help themselves in developing our resources, it would be most helpful in our efforts for Federal aid for roads, public health, the extermination of crop pests, and our rivers and harbor.

A vote for the port amendment does not mean a vote for an appropriation out of the State treasury, but signifies your willingness to extend the credit of the State to the port. It does not mean that $10,000,000 are to be turned over to irresponsible parties in Mobile to be unwisely expended. The whole scheme will be under the supervision and control of the State. The board selected for this work will be chosen from various sections of the State and will be responsible to the governor, the legislature, and therefore the people themselves for their every act, as well as for the expenditure of every dollar of the money used in the construction of port facilities. After the facilities are provided the agents of the people themselves will have charge of the operation and management of the port. A vote for the amendment does mean, in my judgment, that you are willing to develop your property for the good of the whole State without additional cost to a single citizen.

The argument that the development of the port should be made by the people of Mobile themselves and they should not ask the State to guarantee their bonds is untenable. Why, if San Francisco with her 500,000 people and New Orleans with her 400,000 could not, without State aid, construct those improvements which made these great ports what they are, how can you expect Mobile, with less than a hundred thousand people, to make the needed improvements? The man who indulges in that argument may as well object or refuse to contribute to the building of a schoolhouse for his community on the ground that his neighbors who live nearest the schoolhouse will get most benefit from it. It is just as reasonable to say that every man should build his own schoolhouse. There are some who are not able to do this, and should their children be denied an education? If helping your port helps every section of the State, as has been the history of all port development, is it right to say that your port should do alone that which will prove a benefit to your section without some cooperation on your part?

The argument that this is the beginning of a policy of using the treasury of the State for internal improvements generally is not sound, in my opinion. I do not and would not favor State control of everything. The most dangerous tendency of our Federal Government to-day is toward paternalism. I have really become alarmed at the extent to which our Government is going along some lines. The matter of port development is a different question. We are already very wisely committed to a program of road and school building. We are a progressive people. Road building and port building both mean better communication with and better transportation to and from the outside world.

The development of your seaport is but a part of a general program for better transportation facilities not only in Alabama but throughout the Nation. This development goes hand in hand with that of good roads and is of equal importance to our State. To see the highways of some of the other less wealthy States makes an Alabamian ashamed of the roads of his own State. Better highways tapping the railroad lines and better port facilities mean cheaper transportation for our people. It means more tonnage and more business for the railroads, those great arteries of the Nation's commerce.

Surely the railroads do not object to any scheme that will bring more business. The railroads of Alabama need not fear additional taxation if the railroads of California and Louisiana have not had to pay additional taxes. Should it become necessary to take over their terminal properties, this can not be done by the State without first paying for them.

I am not unmindful, gentlemen, that many of our people are not quick to change their fundamental law. I am glad that we are a conservative people and love our constitutional form of government. It has stood the test of many years and let us hope and pray that it will stand for many more. The constitution is our sheet anchor amidst the storms and tempests. The safety of life and property in this country rests absolutely upon our respect for law and constituted authority.

Amending the constitution, after all, is not a most unusual thing. It is sometimes a most essential thing. The Federal Constitution itself has been amended on an average of once every seven or eight years since its adoption, even in a nation with all the conservative wisdom and respect for the Constitution possessed by the American people. The various States have rewritten and in some instances amended their constitutions many times. The very fact that those who framed our constitution provided a way for its amendment must convince every reasonable mind that the fathers themselves expected us to make such changes in that instrument as new occasions and new conditions might demand. While I believe the constitution is a sacred thing, yet, in the onward march of civilization and in the progress and development of States, no one can deny the absolute necessity for changes in our fundamental law in order that we may stimulate our growth, expand our development, and accomplish those things the Almighty God expected of us when he gave us our fertile soil, our standing forests, our rich minerals, and our winding rivers.

Referring to the good-roads amendment which is before you, it was suggested to-day that we have no assurance that the Federal Government will continue its policy of matching funds with ours for the construction of roads. The Congress is thoroughly committed to the policy of good roads. It is a part of the platform of both political parties. Judging from the action of Congress on the last road measure, I feel safe in saying that just as long as the State puts up a dollar for road building, just so long will the Federal Government provide a dollar to match it. You probably know that the conferees on the last road bill before Congress have reached an agreement, with a few changes from the Dowell bill as it passed the Senate in August. Let me here commend to this legislature the splendid work of the State highway commissioner, Mr. Keller, in his efforts for the measure which Congress will soon pass.

The completion of the Muscle Shoals project has become a matter of nation-wide interest. I believe a majority of the American people are decidedly in favor of accepting the Ford offer. They believe that under his control the plant will be more nearly operated for the benefit of the whole country than it would be under the control of any other agency. The press reports of recent date quote the Secretary of War as having stated to Congressman BANKHEAD that if he, the Secretary, wished to "play politics" with Muscle Shoals, he would have long ago recommended the Ford offer to Congress. The Secretary has committed himself, and therefore his party, to the effect that the Government will not make "junk" of that great project. It was argued in Congress by those who opposed the completion of the Wilson Dam that it was a waste of money and not a business proposition. Mr. Ford, a business man and a great captain of industry, now says it is a business proposition, that he is willing to take over the plant under certain conditions, make a payment of five millions of the money invested by the Government, pay interest on the whole investment or money expended by the Government, and sell his products to the American consumer at a reasonable profit. His offer is thus far the best offer made, and the Congress should accept it or a better one. If this is not done, I venture the assertion that those who oppose it will find it difficult to explain their action to their constituents.

There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that before Mr. Ford submitted his offer, and even before he expended his thousands to make an estimate on the project at Muscle Shoals, he first of all considered the fact that the plant is near deep water at Mobile as well as the coal and iron district of Alabama.

The fact that Alabama has within her borders the port of Mobile has already attracted the attention of the United States Steel Corporation, which has expended more than twenty millions of dollars just above Mobile in probably the most modern and complete shipbuilding plant in the whole country. The fact that we are rich in water-power possibilities has only recently resulted in plans for a new plant by the Alabama Power Co. for the development of 140,000 additional horsepower on the Coosa River. Some of the power generated at Muscle Shoals or on the other rivers of the State may yet turn the wheels of industry at Mobile. We may hope that our port facilities will yet be operated by power from these sources.

Let me again urge you, gentlemen, to resubmit to our people the question of whether or not they will have at Mobile the greatest port in the South. It can be done without cost to our people, and I believe they will decide the issue favorably when the amendment is thoroughly understood. We have too much at stake not to do so.

I repeat, Alabama can not afford to mark time while her sister States are marching forward.

How the Per Cent Immigration Act is Working.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBERT JOHNSON,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 21, 1921.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, much more could be said about the immigration situation than I expressed in my speech on this floor November 5 and about the workings of the temporary 3 per cent restriction law. Many Members have been asked for a detailed statement concerning the operation of that law, and I am sure they will secure much important information from a statement made by Hon. W. W. Husband, Commissioner General of Immigration, before the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. Husband's statement deals with the operation of the so-called per cent limit immigration act of May 19, 1921, from June 3, 1921, when the law went into effect, to the end of October, 1921. The law was in operation 28 days in June and the statement, so far as it relates to that period, is, with minor changes, taken from the annual report of the Commissioner General of Immigration to the Secretary of Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. The commissioner said:

IMMIGRATION UNDER THE ACT OF MAY 19, 1921.

Mr. HUSBAND. Chairman JOHNSON and gentlemen of the committee, I am pleased to appear before you, in response to your request, with a statement dealing with the operation of the law from June 3, when it became effective, to October 31, the first five months of the operation of the law, and if I may I will read, in part at least, what I have prepared, and then will be glad to discuss any of the details which may be of interest to the committee.

THE PER CENT LIMIT ACT.

The important event in the immigration record of the year, and in fact one of the most radical and far-reaching events in the annals of immigration legislation, was the enactment of the law of May 19, 1921, entitled "An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States." This law went into effect June 3, 1921, and therefore was in operation 28 days during the fiscal year under consideration. As this is the first strictly immigration law which provides for actually limiting the number of aliens, other than Asiatics, who may be admitted to the United States, a brief review of the legislation may not be out of place in this report.

On December 13, 1920, the House of Representatives, by a vote of 295 to 41, passed a bill which provided for the temporary suspension of all immigration into the United States, with the exception of certain exempt classes. The Senate amended this act by substituting the so-called per cent limit plan of restriction, and this prevailed, but Executive approval was withheld and the compromise measure failed to become a law prior to the final adjournment of the Sixty-sixth Congress on March 4. The proposed measure was immediately introduced in both Houses at the beginning of the present Congress, and, as already stated, became a law on May 19, 1921.

"SEC. 2. (a) That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted under the immigration laws to the United States in any fiscal year shall be limited to 3 per cent of the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality resident in the United States as determined by the United States census of 1920. This provision shall not apply to the following and they shall not be counted in reckoning any of the percentage limits provided in this act: (1) Government officials, their families, attendants, servants, and employees; (2) aliens in continuous transit through the United States; (3) aliens lawfully admitted to the United States who later go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory; (4) aliens visiting the United States as tourists or temporarily for business or pleasure; (5) aliens from countries immigration from which is regulated in accordance with treaties or agreements relating solely to immigration; (6) aliens from the so-called Asiatic barred zone, as described in section 3 of the immigration act; (7) aliens who have resided continuously for at least one year immediately preceding the time of their admission to the United States in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, countries of Central or South America, or adjacent islands; or (8) aliens under the age of 18 who are children of citizens of the United States.

"(b) For the purposes of this act nationality shall be determined by country of birth, treating as separate countries the colonies or dependencies for which separate enumeration was made in the United States census of 1910.

"(c) The Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor, jointly, shall, as soon as feasible after the enactment of this act, prepare a statement showing the number of persons of the various nationalities resident in the United States as determined by the United States census of 1910, which statement shall be the population basis for the purposes of this act. In case of changes in political boundaries in foreign countries occurring subsequent to 1910 and resulting (1) in the creation of new countries, the Governments of which are recognized by the United States, or (2) in the transfer of territory from one country to another, such transfer being recognized by the United States, such officials, jointly, shall estimate the number of persons resident in the United States in 1910 who were born within the area included in such new countries or in such territory so transferred, and revise the population basis as to each country involved in such change of political boundary. For the purpose of such revision and for the purposes of this act generally aliens born in the area included in any such new country shall be considered as having been born in such country, and aliens born in any territory so transferred shall be considered as having been born in the country to which such territory was transferred.

"(d) When the maximum number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any fiscal year under this act shall have been admitted, all other aliens of such nationality, except as otherwise provided in this act, who may apply for admission during the same fiscal year shall be excluded: Provided, That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any month shall not exceed 20 per cent of the total number of aliens of such nationality who are admissible in that fiscal year: Provided further, That aliens returning from a temporary visit abroad, aliens who are professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, nurses, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, aliens belonging to any recognized learned profession, or aliens employed as domestic servants, may, if otherwise admissible, be admitted notwithstanding the maximum number of aliens of the same nationality admissible in the same month or fiscal year, as the case may be, shall have entered the United States; but aliens of the classes included in this proviso who enter the United States before such maximum number shall have entered shall (unless excluded by subdivision (a) from being counted) be counted in reckoning the percentage limits provided in this act: Provided further, That in the enforcement of this act preference shall be given so far as possible to the wives, parents, brothers, sisters, children under 18 years of age, and fiancées, (1) of citizens of the United States, (2) of aliens now in the United States who have applied for citizenship in the manner provided by law, or (3) of persons eligible to United States citizenship who served in the military or naval forces of the United States at any time between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, and have been separated from such forces under honorable conditions."

It will be noted that immigration from certain countries and areas does not come within the provisions of the law, and, eliminating these, it is found that it is applicable only to aliens coming from Europe, including Trans-Caucasia, the region comprising prewar Turkey in Asia,

Persia, Africa, Australasia, all islands of the Atlantic, and certain minor islands of the Pacific. The immigration of aliens who are natives of countries of the New World is not at all subject to the provisions of the act, nor are aliens born elsewhere who have resided in New-World countries for at least one year prior to coming to the United States. Asiatic immigration, being otherwise regulated by laws, treaties, or agreements, is also outside the provisions of the per cent law.

It will be noted further that the law provides for adjusting the foreign-born population resident in the United States in 1910 to the various countries of Europe as they exist at the present time, and this necessitated assigning immigration quotas not only to countries whose boundaries had remained unchanged but also to countries and areas hitherto unknown in immigration statistics. Moreover, it was necessary under the terms of the act to determine the number of aliens who might be admitted from such countries between June 3, when the law went into effect, and June 30, the end of the fiscal year, as well as during the fiscal year 1922 and any month thereof.

The task imposed upon the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor in this respect was completed on June 2, one day before the law went into effect, and the quotas were allotted as follows:

Number of aliens admissible under the act of May 19, 1921, entitled "An act to limit the immigration into the United States."

[2] As eastern Galicia was given up by Austria, according to the treaty of St. Germain but is not yet allotted to any other country (the eastern boundary of Poland being not yet defined), the quota of eastern Galicia will be 5,781 (Poland 20,019) for the fiscal year 1921-22.

It will be noted that the per cent limit law was enacted May 19, 1921, and that so far as its principal provisions were concerned it became effective June 3. Evidently the Congress considered that 15 days was a sufficient warning to transportation companies, but notwithstanding the warning somewhat more than 10,000 aliens of various nationalities were brought to the United States during the month of June in excess of the quota allotted for that month. These aliens were, of course, entirely innocent, and were, indeed, the helpless victims of the transportation companies which brought them. Each of the aliens involved was, of course, entitled to a full examination under the immigration law and also to an appeal to the Secretary of Labor. The situation thus created was an utterly impossible one, and after due consideration Secretary Davis took the only practicable action when on June 10 he directed that such aliens in excess of the quota should if otherwise admissible be admitted temporarily on bond until October 1. In this connection the Secretary held that an extraordinary emergency existed and that the action taken was necessary in the interests of humanity. Subsequent events fully justified the wisdom of that practical and humane act, and much confusion to the Immigration Service and hardship to the aliens involved were thereby averted.

The total number admitted in excess of the June quota was 11,741, the nationalities chiefly represented being Czechoslovakia, 1,689; Greece, 353; Hungary, 747; Italy, 2,320; Jugoslavia, 1,133; Poland, 2,367; Portugal, 517; Rumania, 1,438; Spain, 274.

Notwithstanding these excess admissions, the total number admitted in June from all sources coming within the scope of the per cent act was 28,398, which was only slightly in excess of the quota of 27,298 who were admissible from such sources during the month named. It is, of course, impossible to predict concerning the future operations of the law, but experience during the month of June indicates that the number coming from certain sources, particularly southern and eastern Europe, during the coming fiscal year will be only a fraction of the number who would come were it not for the restrictive provisions of the law.

FOUR MONTHS' EXPERIENCE.

As already noted, the fiscal year 1921–22 began with a surplus of 11,741 aliens who had been temporarily admitted in June by the Secretary of Labor, the understanding being that such excess admissions were to be charged against their respective quotas for the present fiscal year. The Congress subsequently approved the action taken by Secretary Davis, and incidentally removed all doubt as to its legality, by the passage of House joint resolution 153, and the last of the June excesses were charged against the October quotas. There have been relatively small excesses in the case of some nationalities during the four months, July–October, and these have been disposed of through deportation or, in cases where deportation involved peculiar hardship, through tmporary admissions to be charged against quotas of later months.

A fairly complete statistical statement of the operations of the per cent limit law during July, August, September, and October, including the June excesses, already explained, appears in the following table. The title of this table is "Aliens admitted to the United States under the act of May 19, 1921, and charged to the quotas of various countries, July–October, 1921, including admissions in excess of quotas in June, as provided under House joint resolution 153." That is not a very lucid explanation of what is in it, but I will analyze it somewhat.

It should be explained that the figures given in the foregoing table do not necessarily represent the total number of aliens of the various nationalities who were admitted during the four months under consideration, chiefly for the reason that under the law certain classes of aliens are not counted against the quota at all, while certain other classes who are charged against a quota are inadmissible even after such quota is exhausted. Reports are not yet available to show how many aliens were thus admitted in excess of the stipulated quotas during the four months in question, but statistical returns as provided under the general law show that in July 30,441, and in August 32,795, aliens of all classes were admitted from sources controlled by the law of May 19, compared with 28,496 and 30,315, respectively, who were admitted in July and August and charged to the quota. During the same two months the number of immigrant aliens and the number charged to the quotas were practically identical. This seems to indicate that during the first two months of the fiscal year at least comparatively few aliens were admitted under the various exceptions named in the law. As the quotas of various nationalities become exhausted, however, an increasing number of admissions under such exceptions may be expected.

It will be noted from the table that a total of 130,352 aliens were admitted and charged to the various quotas during the four months under consideration, which number is 36.6 per cent of the total permissible immigration of the year from the sources affected. It may be noted also that there was only a slight variation in the number admitted in the various months.

Under the provision of the law which limits the number who may be admitted in any month to 20 per cent of the yearly quota, the admission of 80 per cent of such yearly quota would have been possible in the four months under consideration. For reasons which will be explained later, more than 80 per cent of the yearly quota had been admitted up to October 31 in the following cases: Portugal, 81 per cent; Jugoslavia, 82.5 per cent; Greece, 86.7 per cent—and now we come to some who have been even in excess of the yearly quota—other Europe, 101.2 per cent; Spain, 109.5; New Zealand, 110 per cent; Atlantic Islands, 128 per cent; Turkey, 141.8 per cent; Palestine, 355.3 per cent; and other Asia, 537 per cent.

The excesses admitted from Portugal, Jugoslavia, and Greece were temporary admissions to avoid hardship and have already been charged against the November quotas of these nationalities. In the seven instances in which more than the number admissible in the entire fiscal year are shown to have been admitted, the yearly quotas were so small that they were soon exhausted, and in order to avoid undue hardship the department directed the temporary admission of some of the excess applicants.

In the case of Spain the total quota for the year is only 663, while the number of immigrant and nonimmigrant aliens admitted from that source in the fiscal year 1921 was 23,666. The reduction forced by the new law, of course, amounts practically to a suspension of immigration from Spain, and this applies not only to aliens coming direct from that country but also to persons of Spanish birth who come from Cuba or other near-by islands after less than one year's residence there.

Palestine has an annual quota of only 56, but 199 have been admitted from that source, temporarily or otherwise. The principal excess, however, is found in the case of "other Asia," which area includes Persia, Mesopotamia, Arabia, Hedjas, and certain Mediterranean islands. This area has a yearly quota of 78, and 419 have been admitted, the excess being practically all made up of groups of Assyrians who, it is said, were driven from Persia during the war and had started for the United States several weeks, and in many cases several months, before the per cent limit law was enacted. Practically all of these people were coming to join near relatives who had provided means for their journey to the United States.

The 273 excess admissions shown in the case of Turkey are mostly due to the temporary admissions of Armenians and Greeks who were born in what is now Turkey.

In a great majority of the temporary admission cases rejection and deportation would have resulted in separating or continuing the separation of families, and in a good many instances United States citizens would have been denied the privilege of bringing in members of their families. The total admissions in excess of the yearly quota were 843 up to October 31, and what disposition will finally be made of these cases is a matter of conjecture.

Further analysis of the table shows that with the exception of Austria, Finland, and Russia the yearly quotas of all southern and eastern European countries were more, and in several instances considerably more, than 50 per cent exhausted on October 31, while in the case of northern and western European countries only Belgium and Luxemburg had passed the 50 per cent mark.

Only 26.5 per cent of the permissible immigration from the United Kingdom, 25.9 per cent from Denmark, 18.7 per cent from Norway, 18 per cent from Sweden, and 8.8 per cent from Germany was admitted during the four months. There was, however, a steady increase in the immigration of Germans, the number admitted by months being: July, 697; August, 966; September, 1,756; and October, 2,569.

The next table shows what proportion of the yearly quotas of various areas were admitted during July, August, September, and October. The title of the table is: "Status of the quota of various areas on October 31, 1921, under the act of May 19, 1921."

The table referred to follows:

Status of the quota of various areas on Oct. 31, 1921, under the act of May 19, 1921.

From countries of—	Admitted.[1]	Quota for fiscal year 1921-22.	Per cent of year's quota admitted.
Northern and western Europe	40,158	197,649	20.3
Southern and eastern Europe, including Asiatic Turkey and other Asia	89,811	157,713	57.0
Africa	105	120	88.3
Australia, New Zealand, and other Pacific islands	277	343	80.7
Total	130,352	355,825	36.6

[1] Aliens admitted under the act of May 19, 1921, from July 1 to Oct. 31, 1921 (including June excess).

This table shows that during the four months 36.6 per cent of the permissible immigration for the year was admitted. It further shows, however, that 57 per cent of the total quota for southern and eastern Europe, Turkey, and "other Asia" is exhausted, while only 20.3 per cent of the permissible immigration from northern and western Europe has been admitted.

The next table shows the number of aliens admitted from specified sources during the months of July, August, September, and October, 1921, compared with the number of immigrant aliens admitted from the same sources during the same months in 1913.

The table referred to follows:

Aliens admitted and charged against quotas, July–October, 1921, compared with immigrant aliens admitted, July–October, 1913, by specified areas.

From countries of—	Aliens admitted under the act of May 19, 1921, during July, August, September, and October, 1921.		Immigrant aliens admitted during July, August, September, and October, 1913.
	Number admitted.	Per cent of total admitted.	Number admitted.	Per cent of total admitted.
Northern and western Europe	40,067	33.76	71,384	14.91
Southern and eastern Europe, including Asiatic Turkey and other Asia	78,201	65.96	405,871	84.88
Africa	92	.07	571	.12
Australia, New Zealand, and other Pacific islands	251	.21	473	.09
Total	118,611	100.00	478,299	100.00

In the first place, this table shows that only 118,611 aliens were admitted and charged to the quotas during the first four months of the present fiscal year, compared with 478,299 immigrant aliens alone who were admitted from the same source during the corresponding months in 1913. In other words, the number admitted in 1913 was more than four times as great as the number admitted in 1921 under the per cent limit law, while the number admitted from southern and eastern Europe, Turkey, and "other Asia" was more than five times greater in 1913 than in 1921.

The second interesting fact revealed by these figures is the greatly increased proportion of northern and western European immigrants among those admitted in July, August, September, and October under the per cent limit law compared with the unrestricted immigration during the same months in 1913. In the last-named period—that is, in July–October, 1913—only 14.91 per cent of the immigration admitted from sources now controlled by the per cent law came from northern and western Europe, while during the four months just ended 33.5 per cent, or more than one-third of the total, came from such countries. On the other hand, the proportion of immigrants who came from southern and eastern Europe, Turkey and "other Asia" fell from 84.88 per cent of the total in July–October, 1913, to 65.96 per cent of the total in July–October, 1921, under the per cent limit law of May 19.

I think that covers in a statistical way the main points of operation under the new law

Mr. VAILE. Then you conclude, Mr. Husband, that it has been, broadly speaking, effective in these two ways—first, that there has been an actual reduction in the total immigration of about one-fifth of the number from southern and eastern Europe, and about one-fourth of the number from northern and western Europe; and that, in the second place, there has been a greatly increased proportion of the total immigration from northern and western Europe?

Mr. HUSBAND. Yes; those are the two points.

Mr. RAKER. And under the number of immigrants here and the classes it is quite preferable that that situation continue, is it not?

Mr. HUSBAND. What is that, Judge RAKER?

Mr. RAKER. Following Mr. VAILE'S question, that there has been a decrease in southern and eastern Europe and an increase in northern and western Europe, because of the large population in southern and eastern Europe, it is a good idea to continue that situation in the United States for some little time?

Mr. HUSBAND. Well, that is for the Congress to say, rather than for the bureau.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Interrogation of Mr. Husband developed much information which I can not reproduce here, but which will be found in the committee's report of the hearing. The percentage act has kept from the United States 600,000 or 700,000 aliens, and will by June 30 next have kept out 1,750,000 or 2,000,000; few of whom we were prepared to receive and care for in a year of unemployment and readjustment. I believe the public wants the percentage law perfected and reenacted. A prominent immigration official writes to me:

The public wants a continuation of highly restrictive measures. This is true. I travel much, and my ear is on the ground all the time when people are talking anything about immigration and kindred subjects. There is no doubt of it whatever so far as the American-born part of the public is concerned. There is undoubtedly a strong sentiment in favor of restriction of immigration. While the public does not proclaim its views as loudly as special interests do, there is not a doubt but what it would indorse everything you have said and done along these lines. I listen to men in many walks of life, and I have not heard a dissenting voice on this subject.

Mr. Speaker, I believe I am justified in saying that the steamship companies, with two or three exceptions, have tried to comply with the new law. The big companies have made a cooperative effort to regulate the departures, but have been disappointed because an occasional independent line would break up the registration system by failing to inform the European clearing houses of the number of its passengers by nationalities.

The next law should provide that the numbers charged against the quotas shall be based on actual departures on the other side, instead of on actual admissions. Perhaps it would be well to amend the law in this respect at once and to provide penalties for steamship companies violating the provision.

In conclusion I desire, because of the daily call on this committee for immigration literature, to add an article by Mr. Madison Grant.

APPENDIX.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION: RACIAL ASPECTS.

(By Madison Grant.)

The Great War has left in its wake many problems of vast moment—economic, political, social, and racial problems. Of all these the racial is the most fundamental because it will be the most enduring. Debts can be paid, even though a generation must be starved to do it; frontiers can be corrected, even though wars must be fought for the purpose, but the racial composition of a given country and the complications arising therefrom are there for all time.

For Americans the great question of the day is the restriction of immigration, but for various reasons the public press is strangely silent upon the issues involved.

Such restriction has been considered from many different, mainly selfish, points of view, and the hearings before the Immigration Committees of the House and of the Senate during the past year have given the noisy racial interests an opportunity to be heard.

Transportation lines also have been active in voicing their opposition to any check to their business of carrying living freight in the largest possible quantity. It is perfectly natural for corporations engaged in the transportation of steerage passengers to object to interference and so skillfully and effectively have their interests been defended that they almost succeeded in blocking legislation through their influence with the press.

Another factor in opposing immigration limitation has been the equally selfish desire on the part of the large employers of labor to import unskilled workmen. The demand for cheap labor, of course, is as old as civilization itself and is especially felt where the native population is not subdivided into classes with a base of serfs or peasants accustomed to heavy work.

In the classic civilizations of Greece and Rome this crude labor was supplied by slaves captured in war, while in medieval Europe the lower classes represented a native population ruled by a race of conquerors from the north.

In colonial America the Englishmen who settled in the northern Colonies originally had no aversion to manual labor of the heaviest description, and as a result they flourished and expanded with great rapidity.

The southern Colonies were populated by a different strain of the same race, consisting of a small top dressing of the ruling classes of England and a very large proportion of less desirable strains, but all were Anglo-Saxon. This stratification of the population and the climate acting together made slave labor a necessity.

A similar condition prevailed in many of the West Indian Islands, where there was white aristocracy resting upon a servile base. In the West Indies this stratum of the dominant race was too thin, and after a few generations of civilization, luxury, and in some cases of a fine development of intelligence, the white supremacy was broken and the Negroes either took over the country, as in the case of Haiti, or intermarried and hopelessly diluted the white blood, as in Jamaica, while in the Bahamas, Barbados, and elsewhere the white supremacy is becoming more and more unstable.

About the middle of the nineteenth century the world of the white man was transformed by an industrial revolution and the change from agricultural to industrial conditions was accompanied by a tremendous expansion of population. In America the free farmer, owning his cabin, farm, and wood lot, with a very vital interest in the government and defense of the community, ceased to be the controlling factor, and the number of landless farm laborers, domestic servants, and, above all, factory workmen, greatly increased.

The native Americans were still perfectly willing to work in a lumber camp or on a farm or to sail the high seas, but they did not take kindly to, and, in fact, were physically unfitted for the cramping indoor life of a factory, so crude workers were sought in the guise of immigrants and not of slaves, as in the preceding centuries.

Before discussing the ethnic character of the immigrants let us consider for a moment the actual racial composition of the United States in the middle of the last century. A great deal of nonsense has been written about the mixture of blood in the Colonies, but as a matter of fact it was fundamentally Nordic and thoroughly English, as the great mass of the population was from the British Isles.

The Dutch in New York, never numerous, were, as a matter of fact, largely Frisian, and were racially closely akin to the Saxon population of England. Even the Saxon dialects find their closest affinity in those of the North Hollanders.

The early French Huguenots arrived largely by way of Holland and England, and to a large extent were representatives of the Nordic element in France. Even the later Huguenots from Rochelle came from what is to this very day a Nordic center. These Frenchmen, while for the most part men of education and culture, were few in number.

The Germans, who settled in Pennsylvania and Maryland, were more numerous than either the Dutch or French Huguenots, but were inferior to the latter in their intellectual contribution to the Colonies. They were to a large extent Palatines and contained a very considerable peasant Alpine element.

As to the British population, it was on the whole much more Nordic than the average of Britain, even at that time, and still more so to-day, being drawn from those sections of England and the Scotch lowlands where the Nordic blood, especially the Danish and Anglian strains, were preponderant, as well as from the coast regions of southwest England, where the seafaring classes were largely of Norse origin.

Many of these north English and Scotch borderers reached America by way of Ireland, where they settled for a generation or two and were known as Scotch-Irish, being Protestants and for the most part Presbyterians. They had absolutely no affinity, either racial, cultural, or religious, with the people we call Irish to-day, who were then a serf class in the south and west of Ireland.

The bulk of the purely English immigration into New England arrived in the middle of the seventeenth century, while the Scotch-Irish came about a century later.

There was very little immigration of numerical importance into this country after the Revolution until the middle of the nineteenth century, when the Catholic Irish and the German immigration began.

The base of the white population of the Colonies at the time of the Revolution is best shown by the 1790 census, which gives a population of British descent of over 90 per cent of the whole. Of this British population 83.5 per cent was English and 6.7 per cent was Scotch. The Scotch-Irish and Irish, taken together, were only 1.6 per cent, and it must be remembered that many of the so-called Scotch-Irish were also of English and not Scotch extraction. The Dutch were 2 per cent of the whole, and even in New York only numbered 16.1 per cent.

From 1790 to 1850 the census of whites shows a small increase in the proportion of the foreign born, but there was from that date onward a more rapid and steady expansion of the alien element.

The census of 1850 indicates the beginning of this change in population, but at the time of the Civil War the foreign elements in this country were still a negligible quantity and of no political influence, being considered only in the light of laborers or available recruits.

The potato famine in Ireland in 1846 forced the emigration of the poorer peasants of the southwestern part of Ireland, consisting very largely of the old pre-Nordic Mediterranean stock mixed with very ancient residual types. Owing to the introduction into Ireland of the potato the population had increased far beyond the capacity of the country for producing food, so that when this single crop failed emigration became a necessity and was directed toward the United States. It introduced in that country an element religiously and temperamentally antagonistic to the native American.

To meet this menace there was organized a powerful political movement called the "Know Nothing Party," which in the fifties nearly succeeded in stopping immigration. The issues involved were, however, overshadowed by the quarrel between the North and South, but the hostility engendered at that time lingered for many years in some parts of the country, notably the Middle West. Signs on railroad stations reading "No Irish need apply" were for many years no unusual sight.

A few years after this Irish immigration the revoluntionary disturbance throughout continental Europe occurred. These revolutions were for the most part failures, but resulted in sending over to this country many Germans. These German immigrants were for the most part Protestants and scattered throughout the agricultural districts losing their identity, accepting the English language, and merging with the communities in which they settled. They were in sharp contrast with the German immigrants of a half century later, who, coming from the united German Empire, were proud of being Germans and formed blocks of German-speaking, kultur-loving foreigners in our midst.

Americans have failed to make the necessary distinction between the individual Germans who came over here from the then independent and weak German States and the later immigrants who came over under the spell of the powerful and consolidated German Empire.

Along with these Irish and Germans came many Scandinavians, who settled on farms in the newer sections of the country and reenforced the native Nordic element.

In spite of much opposition and discontent among the native Americans, the immigrants in the fifties, sixties, and seventies took an important part in supplying domestic servants and rough labor for the construction of railroads, canals, and building operations throughout the North and West.

All this ended in the eighties when a new class of immigrants began to arrive, this time not from northwestern Europe but from south and southeastern Europe. They introduced new social strata in the country, forcing out the Irish into the ranks of foremen while the Italians dug the ditches and our mines were worked by so-called Poles and Slovaks.

There was also a rapid increase of immigrants of Italian, Austrian, Slav, Greek, and finally Russian nationalities, while thousands of Armenians, Syrians, and people of the Near East poured into the unfortunate United States.

Two hundred years ago some of the most valuable strains of the northwestern European population were really oppressed and countries like Switzerland, England, and finally the United States, by offering a refuge, received many valuable elements. The Huguenots, for example, expelled from France at the end of the seventeenth century, were a very desirable class, and greatly benefited the countries in which they took refuge.

This was true also of England during the Puritan revolution and to a less extent it was true of the revolutionary Germans in 1848. It is, however, not true to-day of any country on earth. Now that Russia has relinquished her grip on Finland it can not be truly stated that political refugees represent the desirable classes of the country from which they flee. The only possible exception is Russia, but there the Nordic upper classes are showing no tendency to come to this country, although subjected to robbery and massacre at home.

As a result of this new immigration from south and southeastern Europe, the proportion of the British population has steadily fallen since 1880, but the present conditions are, nevertheless, not as bad as the popular conception of the racial composition of the country would indicate.

During the early part of the Great War the Canadians expressed the fear that the Germans in this country were so numerous that they would rise, seize the Government, and prevent our joining the Allies. Even to-day one hears many amusing statements that the Germans represent a population of sixteen to twenty millions, while the Irish claim some 20,000,000, the Slavs 9,000,000, and heaven alone knows how many Italians there are in the United States when it becomes a question of a memorial to Dante. The fact is that out of the total population of 106,000,000 there are actually thirteen and a third millions of foreign birth and in addition less than 19,000,000 of foreign or mixed parentage. Those of German birth constitute 8,000,000, while the Irish, including the Ulstermen, amount to about 4,500,000, being actually outnumbered by the British-Canadian group of 5,100,000.

Neither the Germans, Irish, nor Jews when separated number even 7 per cent of the population.

These figures are based on the census of 1920 and, bad as they are, the fact still remains that, including blacks, the ancestry of three out of four of the inhabitants of this country extends beyond the middle of the last century. Those who go back as far as that are usually derived from a line that carriers on still another century. In other words, the population consists of two distinct elements, one the native Americans of colonial descent and the other the various foreign groups, some in sympathy with the native Americans and some remaining hyphenates.

So much for the racial composition of the country as it is to-day. Serious enough, but not hopeless.

A new problem confronts America, not the past but the future. The theory of allowing immigrants into this country was based on the erroneous idea that Americans can be made out of any kind of racial material. It was thought that it was only necessary to wave the American flag, send the children to public schools, teach them to speak English, and, presto, we have a full-blown American.

Two generations ago we would have also demanded religious uniformity, but now that has been cheerfully forgotten and we appear to be ready to abandon Christianity itself as a test of admission. Thanks to our foreign press and the encouragement it is receiving from native Americans we may have serious trouble in maintaining even the supremacy of the English tongue.

The old ethnology, which was based on language and nationality, has given way to the science of physical anthropology. Modern biologists are agreed, except where blinded by their own racial limitations, that the physical inheritance of man is not influenced by his environment and that his psychology and mental predispositions are equally unchangeable.

All that favorable environment can do is to give full scope to the development of the physical and mental capacities of the individual, but the limitations for such development are fixed definitely and finally by race.

If we grant the premise that the native Americans of British descent founded this country, formulated its constitution, and have thus far governed the land with more or less success, then it is hardly wise for native Americans to entrust the future of their country to men not of Nordic breed.

Numbers of the immigrants now coming over here are not of that breed, but are of races that have for many thousands of years shown an utter incapacity to appreciate the ideas and ideals that have heretofore dominated this country. Why, then, should we invite them to come? There can be only one answer to that question, and that is because we need them for our own purposes and not because they want to come. The question is merely whether we need them or not to populate the country.

We unquestionably do need them if our ideals are the development of the country in a single generation, the slaughter of all mammals for food, trophies, or fur, of all birds for sport or feathers, the cutting of all forests for timber and grape stakes, the opening of all coal mines, the draining of all oil wells, the harnessing of all waterfalls for power. If all the valleys of the Sierras are to be drowned to irrigate deserts, if all rich bottom lands must be needlessly exhausted, if all our rivers and streams must be stripped of their fish and turned into sewers to carry off waste materials for factories, if the land must be gridironed with railroads and highways—all in a few decades—then it is obvious that we must have a servile class to do the work.

If, on the other hand, this work can be done as the population expands naturally and several centuries can be devoted to the orderly and scientific development of the country, then this work can be left for the native Americans.

If we concede that the fundamental question is not how fast but how wisely we can develop the country, then it is our duty to consider the racial composition of the United States a century hence.

There are two important considerations to take up. The first is the well-founded belief that an immigrant population does not so much augment as replace an existing population where the incoming type has a lower standard of living. The arrival of immigrants of low social status has an unfavorable effect on the birth rate of the higher types. The birth rate of native Americans has fallen steadily in those portions of the country where immigrants are most numerous, as in New England and the Middle Eastern States, while in the South and in the West it still remains substantial.

In other words, immigrant workmen have replaced native American workmen. One American out of ten gets a job as foreman, but he, too, is ultimately replaced even there by the more energetic members of the gang under him.

The second consideration is perhaps just as important. It is a popular belief that the population in a country like the United States can expand indefinitely. This is true up to the limit of food supply at a given state of development. It is hardly necessary to point out that all the best land is now utilized and, while cultivation can be improved and inferior waste land brought under the plow, there is a definite limit to such expansion.

The studies of Prof. Raymond Pearl have shown that we have just reached the point not of maximum population but of maximum rate of increase and that from now on that rate of increase will decline until in less than two centuries it will become stabilized and the population reach nearly its maximum density and amount to roughly twice our present numbers.

A century ago when there was no immigration the rate of increase was far greater than during the last decade when millions of immigrants poured into the country. Do we want this increase in the future to come from the people now here or do we want it to be derived from strange races from beyond the Jordan?

To this there can be only one answer if the issues are properly understood. The full realization of these perils is probably due to the war and to the discovery, new to many people, that we have in our midst millions of people who are not Americans, but are German-Americans, Irish-Americans, Italian-Americans, or Jewish-Americans. As a result there was an overwhelming demand for a complete stop or a severe check to immigration, which Congress could not ignore.

In 1917 the literacy test (a restrictive measure of great power) was passed over President Wilson's veto by a vote of 287 to 106 in the House and a vote of 62 to 19 in the Senate.

A further restriction bill favoring the old immigration from northwestern Europe as against the new immigration from southeastern Europe was passed in February, 1921, in the Senate by a vote of 61 to 2 and in the House by a vote of 296 to 40. It failed by reason of a pocket veto by President Wilson in the last days of his administration.

This bill was reintroduced in the new Congress and finally passed the Senate by a vote of 78 to 1 and the House by a vote of 276 to 33 and was signed on the 19th day of May, 1921, by President Harding. While there are many loopholes in this bill and the zeal of various racial groups may impair the effect of some of its provisions, all true Americans should rejoice that our policy toward immigration has been radically changed by abandoning the old sentimental slush about "refuge for the oppressed" and by discriminating in favor of the stock which settled and developed our country.

The need for such legislation is emphasized by the fact that the ports of Europe from Danzig to Havre are choked with wretched outcasts trying to escape the aftermath of the Great War, because our indiscriminate charity and thoughtless waste have established for us the well-deserved reputation of being "easy marks." To the oriental minds of eastern Europe this opportunity must not be allowed to slip by.

Immigrants by the millions, drawn from the lowest stratum of European society, from Ireland to Poland, are ready to flock here. Now that peace is established with Germany, millions of Germans will seek to better their fortunes within our country, because the Fatherland, with its industries checked, will be unable to support its present population. Add to these the uncounted mass of that half-Asiatic welter of peoples we call Russians, and we can readily see that in another decade the controlling Anglo-Saxon element would be in a hopeless minority. The menace is not immigration in the old sense of the word, but is true migration of peoples on a scale never before known.

The Japanese danger in the West is not yet serious, because it is thoroughly understood on the Pacific coast that the Japanese must not be allowed to enter this country in numbers. The white man of the West, like his brothers in Australia, New Zealand, and British Columbia, is absolutely firm in his determination to keep these parts of the world a white man's country.

Of the Negro question in the South little need be said except to point out that the North is beginning to get a taste of the conditions against which the white southerners have struggled for two generations.

The enormous votes in favor of restrictive measures in both branches of Congress show that at last the public sentiment in America has been aroused and that we have a President who is in sympathy with the popular demand for the preservation of what is best in America. Former restrictive measures were vetoed by President Cleveland, who lived to repent his action; by President Taft, who did not understand the issues; and by President Wilson, who was in sympathy with the racial elements seeking admission, but at last Legislature and Executive are cooperating in a manner that should give Americans a new confidence in our form of government.

"Race, all is race," said Disraeli, and he certainly knew whereof he spoke. The day is dawning when the "myth of the melting pot" will be relegated to the limbo of forgotten fallacies and take its place with Symmes's polar hole, with the machine of perpetual motion, with special creation, and with a flat earth. Conference Report on H. R. 8245—the Revenue Bill.

OF
HON. ISAAC BACHARACH,
OF NEW JERSEY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 21, 1921.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, I regret that illness in my faimily made it necessary for me to be absent from the House when the conference report on the Fordney revenue bill was called up for consideration. I had intended to make some remarks on revenue legislation, with particular reference to the sales tax, and I shall therefore take advantage of the permission given me by the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this important subject.

The Republican platform of 1920 has this to say on the subject of taxation:

> But a sound policy equally demands the early accomplishment of that real reduction of the tax burden which may be achieved by substituting simple for complex tax laws and procedure; prompt and certain determination of the tax liability for delay and uncertainty; tax laws which do not, for tax laws which do, excessively mulct the consumer or needlessly repress enterprise and thrift.

Much as I regret to admit it, I do not believe that we have accomplished in this revenue bill all that is promised in that plank, and I can only look at this as a temporary measure which will need further revision in the very near future.

There is no more important domestic propositic.. confronting us to-day than the question of taxation. The country must have more relief from the tax burden than is carried in this act. There must be a real revision and simplification of our tax system which will meet the general satisfaction of the people.

I believe and I hope that the revival of industrial prosperity will be stimulated by the relief afforded in this bill, but the return to real prosperity is dependent upon the removal of every obstacle which stands in its way and acts as a brake to industrial progress.

While our country was at war and during the period of readjustment immediately following the close of the war the people were willing to submit to the heavy burden of taxation carried in the revenue bill of 1918, even though that law carried with it many inequalities.

But now peace has been formally declared with all the powers with which we were at war, and we can not in justice to the people go on either with the form or character of taxation which was devised to meet the heavy demands of war.

It is true that this act gives us some relief from some of the obnoxious war taxes, but the real benefits of this act will not be enjoyed by our industries until the fiscal year 1923, when it is estimated that Federal taxes will be reduced approximately $750,000,000.

Bearing in mind the enormous sums that will be required to carry on our governmental activities for the next few years to come, it was not possible with safety to further reduce our taxes under our present system of raising revenue.

In the framing of a revenue law there are two outstanding factors which must be taken into consideration. In conjunction with our tariff law, it must first raise sufficient revenue to take care of the contemplated expenditures; and, secondly, it should so spread out the burden of taxation that it will be equitably distributed among all the people and not be discriminatory or burdensome to any class of individuals, corporations, or industries.

It is necessary for us to remember that unless the country is prosperous and there is an abundance of work for all classes the sources from which we derive our revenue must necessarily dry up. It follows, therefore, that any system of taxation which hinders industry and retards business, so that unemployment is the general rule and not the exception, is fundamentally and economically wrong.

The essential necessity which confronts us as a Nation at this time is the bringing back of business to a normal basis; a return to prosperity which will give employment to the millions of unemployed and wipe out the general feeling of unrest and dissatisfaction which exists throughout the country.

To bring this about every incentive which Congress can offer should be given to the business interests of the country for the stimulation of production to the highest degree in every industry, for upon production depends not only the steady employment of both labor and capital but the sources from which revenue is derived.

It takes a man of grit and courage to embark in undertakings into which any degree of hazard enters, when he must take in with him a partner who does none of the work, has none of the worry, and takes none of the risk, but gets 50 per cent of the profits. That is just the kind of partner Congress is giving every big business venture in the country to-day. The fangs of the tax vampire have been shortened but slightly by this new revenue measure, but they are still long enough to sink into the very sinews of business and implant the germs of sleeping sickness therein at a time when the promise of the naval holiday had begun to inspire in the hearts of all forward-looking men the hope that therein would be laid the foundations of an enduring financial and industrial revival.

Nobody believes for an instant that there is any deep conviction in Congress that the heavy surtax will raise a heavier revenue than a moderate levy. It is axiomatic that when a tax reaches the point of penalty it automatically becomes self-limiting. The motive for penalizing capital for punitive purposes is so illy concealed behind the camouflage of concern for the welfare of the man with the small purpose that it is arousing the deepest resentment from the great financial interests whose cooperation in the work of restoring the industrial and financial structure to old-time standards is just as necessary as that of the wage worker.

If we are ever going to get back to a fair-play basis, we have got to give labor and capital an equal show. We give the man with the small salary a liberal exemption on the income-tax scheme, but we are unwilling to give the man with a big income, even if he has built it up by a life of hard work, the slightest concession. Congress not only takes away half of it, unless it is buried in tax-exempt securities, but it seeks to deprive him of the privilege of making gifts to his wife and family on the theory that these largesses can not have their motive in the liberality of his heart but purely in a mean, contemptible desire to cheat the Government.

The enormous decline in the receipts from the taxes on business during the past two years and the very low estimate of receipts from these sources for the present year clearly demonstrates the fact that such taxes not only are not bringing the desired results but that they defeat the very object desired by reducing the profits and turnover on which they are based.

It is estimated that there is about $16,000,000,000 invested in tax-exempt securities, from which the Government receives no return. Plainly speaking, this means that $16.000,000,000 has been taken out of circulation for the purposes of promoting industry. Can any one doubt that there would be an instant return to industrial prosperity if $16,000,000,000 were to-day released for industrial investment at moderate interest rates? I venture to predict if half of that amount were available there would be no cause for the idleness which now exists throughout the country. Not only would it furnish abundance of work for the unemployed, but from it, at the lowest rate of the income-tax schedule, 4 per cent—and I believe the average rate would be much higher—the Government would receive $640,000,000 in revenue.

There are two chief sources from which revenue can be derived, income and profits on the one hand and expenditures on the other. A tax on profits is a tax on production, but a tax on expenditures is not a tax on production or individual effort. Such a tax encourages the habit of thrift, for it falls heaviest upon those who spend most. It is a check on unnecessary expenditures, and it encourages efficiency and hard work, which produce profits.

Of this character is the much favorably talked about sales tax, and it is a source of disappointment to me not to see written into this act a provision for the adoption of a sales tax. I have given much time and study to this plan of taxation, and from my fairly wide experience as a business man I believe it to be economically sound. It will produce much revenue—as much or as little as we want according to the rate carried—and it so spreads out the infliction of the tax as not to make it a burden to any class of people or to any individual.

There are a number of sales-tax plans advocated by students of taxation, but after studying them all I believe the most satisfactory tax would be what is known as the turnover tax; there are two general forms of the turnover-tax plan, the one applying to the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise only, and the other applying to the sale of capital assets, personal services, and so forth, as well as goods, wares, and merchandise. The only difference in the two plans is that the latter will yield more than the former at any given rate.

There is, or at least there should be, nothing startling in the adoption of a sales tax at this time. It is not a new proposition at all, even to this country. Such a tax was in effect during our Civil War, and while it did not work entirely satisfactory it did produce a goodly amount of revenue, and I think it is reasonable to assume that its failure—if a failure it was—was due to the high rates carried and the inability of the Government to properly administer the law and collect the tax.

For one I do not believe that we would experience any such difficulty in administering a sales tax now, for if our present complex and puzzling tax laws can be administered and the tax collected certainly we could do equally as well, if not very much better, under the more simple plan of a sales tax.

It seems to me that we should need no further proof of the workability and soundness of the sales tax than can be gathered from the success which has attended the adoption of this tax in our Philippine possessions. It has been in operation there for the past 16 years.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], a very ardent opponent of the sales tax, some months ago delivered a speech on the floor of this House giving a résumé of his observations of the state of affairs in the Philippine Islands as he found them to be on his recent visit there. He spoke in very eloquent terms of the rapid progress made in the past 20 years, and dwelt with considerable length and emphasis upon the very excellent economic and financial conditions of the islands, and as a result of his observations he believed that the political independence of the islands should no longer be delayed.

Bearing in mind Mr. FREAR'S observations at that time, I think it might be well to quote here from the testimony of Mr. John S. Hord, former collector of customs and the author of the sales tax law in the Philippines, who concurs in all that Mr. FREAR has said regarding the very excellent condition of the islands. Mr. Hord in his testimony before the Senate Finance Committee, advocating the adoption of the sales tax in the United States, says:

In 1905 it became necessary to adopt a sales tax in the Philippine Islands, together with other taxes then existing, which provide sufficient revenue to supply the islands with the amount they would lose through the cessation of customs duties whenever those islands were given reciprocal free trade with this country.

The sales tax then adopted produced within a few years sufficient funds to justify Congress in giving the Filipinos free trade, such as had been given some years previously to Hawaii and Porto Rico. The amount collected to-day from the Philippine sales tax is somewhat greater than the total customs revenues were 16 years ago.

Summarizing the substances of Mr. FREAR'S address, Mr. Hord continues:

The above is the situation as found by Representative FREAR to exist in the Philippine Islands 15 years after the sales tax law went into operation. Any member of this committee who desires to obtain a gloomy contrast to the vivid figure painted by Representative FREAR should certainly read the annual reports of the Philippine Commission to the Secretary of War in this city during the five or six years that elapsed before the sales tax law was enacted in those islands.

The islands were then bankrupt. The sales tax law saved the islands.

Sixteen years ago the Philippine Commission did me the honor to ask that I prepare a draft of a sales tax law. This I did, and four years later, when as collector of internal revenue I could certify that the new tax law would supply the necessary revenue, I was detailed by the Philippine Commission to come here and make these facts manifest to Congress. Twelve years ago I appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means and before members of this committee with all necessary data to show that the sales tax law in the Philippine Islands was a success. Largely on the strength of these proofs Congress saw fit to give the islands free entry into this country for all of their products.

Of interest also is an excerpt from the inaugural address of Hon. James F. Smith, now a member of the Court of Customs Appeals in Washington, former Governor General of the Philippines, some three or four years after the sales tax went into effect, as follows:

She destroyed without hesitation a wrong system of internal taxation, which imposed upon the poor almost the entire charges of government, and for it she substituted a modern system of internal revenue which so distributes the load that every citizen is compelled to bear his fair share of the governmental business.

I desire to quote also a cablegram from former Gov. Gen. Harrison to Hon. David F. Houston, Secretary of the Treasury under the past administration, in response to the Secretary's inquiry for information as to how the sales tax worked in the Philippines. Gov. Harrison cabled as follows:

Hon. DAVID F. HOUSTON,
Secretary of the Treasury:
(Secretary of War (McIntyre), Washington.)

Referring to letter from your office of September 30, 1920, I hope the Bureau of Insular Affairs has already answered most of the questions in time to be of service to you. They have all laws, forms, and regulations issued under our percentage tax on merchants' sales. This system was a part of our first internal revenue law, in 1904, and has continued in effect ever since. The tax began with one-third of 1 per cent on the gross value in money of all goods sold for domestic consumption. In 1914 the law was amended to increase the tax to 1 per cent, and "merchant" was defined to include manufacturers who sell articles of their own production and commission merchants. We are now considering increasing the tax to 2 per cent. It is the most satisfactory, accurate, economical, productive, and equitable tax in our system, and produces no public complaint except the just criticism that some articles of ordinary consumption are taxed more than once in changing hands several times before reaching the ultimate consumer. Written report follows.

HARRISON.

The general plan of the Philippine tax was copied from the sales tax that has been in force in Mexico for more than half a century and is still in operation to-day, and, although at the very low rate of one-half of 1 per cent, it is one of the principal sources of revenue.

A limited sales tax was put into effect in Canada last year, and while the results of the tax are not yet available, it is generally understood that the law there is working satisfactorily and that they are seriously contemplating extending its scope, as is evidenced in a communication received by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. FORDNEY] from Hon. George W. Taylor, assistant deputy minister of inland revenue, under date of December 9, 1920, from which I quote in part as follows:

From indications based on returns of collections to date, it appears that unless there is a very great reduction in the volume of domestic trade during the balance of the present fiscal year, the total amount of collections through the medium of this tax will meet the expectations held by the Government at the imposition of the tax.

It has been found that the levying of the sales tax has caused no appreciable disturbance of markets or market prices; no undue enhancement of costs, as reflected in index figures, is discernible.

Judging from the paucity of complaint and the number of commendations expressed, the principle of the sales tax, being virtually a tax at the origin, appears to be universally acceptable to the Canadian people. As a matter of fact, observations of the department indicate that the sales tax is a popular innovation in the production of revenue.

In France a turnover tax has been in operation since June, 1920. While the revenue derived from the French turnover tax is not as great as estimated, yet there has been a steady gain in the receipts month after month. The latest available figures for the month of September, 1921, show that there was a deficit of some 84,000,000 francs as compared with the budget estimate, but the receipts for the month were more than 135,000,000 francs greater than for the same month of the preceding year.

However, the minister of finance in his report states there has been a general falling off in receipts of revenue from all sources, as compared with the budget estimates, amounting to 597,532,000 francs for the first seven months of the year, and it is stated that the failure of the turnover tax to produce the revenue estimated in the budget is due to its faulty administration, too many exemptions, and to the general stagnation in business.

As a matter of fact, we have a sales tax in operation at the present time, since all of the excise and special taxes of our present tax law, and those which still remain in this act, are nothing more than a sales tax, but which we designate as a tax on sales. We have in these taxes every form of sales tax that has been suggested.

We have the manufacturers' tax in the tax on automobiles, musical instruments, furs, candy, tobacco, and so forth. There is also the sales tax paid by the consumer, such as the tax on carpets, wearing apparel, toilet articles, medicinal articles, ice cream, soda water, and so on.

The only difference between these taxes on sales and the general sales tax which I advocate is that the rates under the present law average 10 per cent on a limited number of articles, as against a proposed low rate of 1 per cent or less, if everything that is offered for sale were subject to tax.

It is argued that those things which were so taxed in the law of 1918, some of which are continued under this act, are luxuries, and are therefore only enjoyed by the well-to-do. But if we take the two chief articles of these so-called luxuries—furs and jewelry—I think we will find that the people who buy the bulk of those articles are not of the wealthy class, but those of ordinary means.

If that were not true, where would be the necessity for all of the installment plan jewelry stores now in existence? People of means do not patronize such stores, and why the necessity for every women's garment store to carry a large line of furs? The wealthy are not numbered among the clientele of such stores, and yet we see hundreds of them in existence right here in the city of Washington catering especially to the employees of our Government who can not by any stretch of imagination be classed as wealthy.

Then, again, does anyone consider a Ford car a luxury? It is almost, if not entirely, a real necessity. And what are we to say of the tax on candy, soda water, and ice cream; of the tax on admissions to the movies? Are those taxes, which have turned in enormous sums to the Treasury, paid chiefly by the classes or by the masses?

More than $1,000,000,000 has been raised from these taxes on sales during the past year, the most of which has come from the pockets of that class of people who are not burdened with excessive incomes.

There have been varying estimates made as to the amount of revenue that would be derived from a 1 per cent turnover tax, ranging from a $6,000,000,000 maximum to a minimum of $1,700,000,000, estimated by the officials of the Treasury Department. If a sales tax of 1 per cent should be applied to the sale of capital assets, personal services, and all other transactions in addition to goods, wares, and merchandise, I believe that it would yield not less than $2,000,000,000.

This would permit of the repeal of all the special excise taxes carried in this act and in addition it would permit of a further revision of the surtax schedule and a further exemption in the normal income tax so that at the end of the year those with incomes of $5,000 and less would not be obliged to pay any further tax than the tax which they had already paid on their purchases.

As previously stated I am very sorry that this act does not carry with it a sales tax of some kind, for I believe that it would be a step in the right direction and once adopted it will forever remain one of the principal features of our revenue legislation. However, the fact that we do not now adopt a sales tax does not mean that it will not come before us sometime in the future. As a matter of fact it is the general impression that a sales tax must be adopted if we are to pay the proposed soldiers' bonus, for through no other source can we procure the money to do this.

The friends of the sales tax have every reason to feel encouraged with what has already been accomplished. There has been an awakened conscience throughout the country as to the real merits of such a system of taxation. It has the indorsement of manufacturers and merchants—men who should well know how taxes are passed on to the consumer; of the United States Chamber of Commerce and many other State and national trade and commercial organizations.

It is strongly supported editorally and otherwise by the leading daily and commercial newspapers of the country, including the New York Times, New York Tribune, the Philadelphia Inquirer, Philadelphia Ledger, and the Hearst papers of the country, and I make bold to inquire if anyone ever heard of the Hearst papers supporting any proposition that was against the poor and in favor of the rich.

I earnestly recommend to you the reading of the testimony offered before the Senate Finance Committee. In this testimony will be found full and complete answers to all of the arguments that have been offered in objection to the sales tax.

It is my firm conviction that sooner or later we will have a sales tax as one of the chief features of our revenue laws, and it is my humble opinion that the sooner we adopt such a law the better it will be for the country.

In conclusion I wish to impress upon you this fundamental fact which can not be successfully contradicted; it is this: That all taxes are finally paid by the consumer, by the last person who buys and uses the article taxed, no matter what the article may be; that everything one uses is taxed; it may be taxed indirectly or it may be taxed directly, but it is taxed. That being so, is it not better for the consumer to know just what the amount of that tax shall be by having the tax plainly stated in our tax law rather than an indefinite tax based upon probable profits and therefore left to the judgment of the manufacturer, the jobber, and the retailer as to how much tax they shall add in order to be on the safe side?

I feel very much gratified with the very favorable manner in which the sales-tax plan has been received throughout the country. When I first introduced a bill for the adoption of the sales-tax plan, in January, 1920, the matter was not received with any evidence of universal approval, but since that time it has rapidly grown in favor and has made such tremendous headway that I feel very much encouraged.

Among the newspapers and periodicals that have printed matter favoring the sales tax are the following:

American Food Journal, Bache Review, Wall Street Journal, Manufacturers' Record, Washington Times, New York Times, Banking and Finance, American Review of Reviews, Protectionist, Finance and Industry, Nation's Business, Weekly Review, United States Bulletin, National Real Estate Journal, Drug Trade Weekly, Economic World, Financial Age, National Marine, Financial World, Outlook (financial section).

It has also been favorably indorsed by the following organizations, which is only a partial list:

Idaho Retail Merchants' Association; Trades Council of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia; Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce; Philadelphia Board of Trade; Philadelphia Commercial Exchange; Philadelphia Maritime Exchange; National Association of Real Estate Boards; National Association of Manufacturers; Broadway Association, of New York City; Tax League of America; Chamber of Commerce of America; Music Industries, representing 12 national music associations; Boston Chamber of Commerce; Chicago Association of Commerce; Massachusetts Retail Merchants' Association; National Retail Dry Goods Association; National Association of Retail Clothiers; National Automobile Chamber of Commerce; Motor and Accessories Manufacturers' Association; National Business Men's Tax Association; Business Science Club of Philadelphia; National Jewelers' Exchange; Babson Statistical Organization; National Garment Retailers' Association; New York Board of Trade and Transportation; National Bank of Commerce; Law and Order Union; Associated Retailers of St. Louis; National Automobile Dealers' Association; national committee on the fur industries, Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

The Sheppard-Towner Bill.

OF

HON. LESTER D. VOLK,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 19, 1921.

Mr. VOLK. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to understand why at this time when the country at large is seeking relief from burdensome taxation, reform in methods of taxation, reduction of armament to reduce taxation, and economy in governmental expenditures, it is proposed to saddle an added burden on the Federal and State Treasuries by means of a bill (S. 1039) of this character.

The title of the bill would seem to indicate a necessity—

An act for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States.

No necessity exists for this particular bill aside from providing, as it does, for an army of paid professional social workers. There is no public necessity. Where such a necessity has existed, the States have not failed to meet it. If they had failed, this legislation would not compel the performance of the duty to protect maternity and infancy. There is no necessity for huge appropriations from the Federal Treasury to compel State acceptance of a scheme of social work which they have heretofore almost unanimously rejected.

At the outset, permit me to state that I am in perfect accord with the principles of making for the protection of our motherhood and the conservation of our childhood. I believe that communities themselves should and must carry on activities along these lines for the betterment of the community and the benefit of its citizenship. But I am opposed to paternalistic legislation on the part of the Federal Government in matters which are the concern and should be the business of the State and the community.

Highly organized movements backed by vast sums of money for publicity have inaugurated a nation-wide propaganda for Federal-aid measures.

Favoring this bill have been organizations of women, various radical groups, a few high-salaried public-health officials, and many social workers.

Opposing the bill are leading physicians and medical societies of the country, manufacturers' associations and alliances, and women, including the only woman Member of the Sixty-seventh Congress, the Hon. ALICE M. ROBERTSON.

In my opinion the purposes of the bill are three:

1. To enlarge the Children's Bureau to such an extent as to increase the importance of its position—that is, eventually to graduate it from the ranks of a bureau to that of a department.

2. To furnish a back-door method of entrance for social and health insurance in States which have persistently and after careful consideration of the question closed their doors against it.

3. And most important, to furnish positions for welfare workers and the funds for propaganda.

The Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor was created in 1912. Its objects as stated in that act were—to investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, and especially to investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents, diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories.

The statement of Miss Julia Lathrop, Chief of the Children's Bureau, Department of Labor, before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, that "the plan was originated in the bureau," at once places the mark of self-interest upon it and should be carefully considered by the observer from that angle.

Quoting further from the testimony:

This problem was not approached as a medical problem. * * *. These investigations have been continued by the bureau since 1912 and have resulted in a body of facts showing the intimate coincidence of ignorance and poverty and civic neglect with high infant-mortality rates. (Report of hearing, Dec. 20, 1920, p. 18, H. R. 10925.)

It is difficult to understand how we can disassociate the medical phases from a question in which the practice of medicine has so intimate a part. From the viewpoint of the proponents of the bill it is of small concern that no effort has been made to determine, in computing the statistics, how many deaths were due to lack of medical care, mismanagement of obstetrics, the quality of the disease, or the morbid conditions in the mother—whether hereditary or acquired, organic or functional—or the new-born child.

Is it of no value that during the past decade medical training has improved and medical science has made rapid progress in the study of the preventable causes and cure of diseases; that good nursing, modern hospitals with excellent maternity wards, fewer instrumental deliveries, and generally practiced surgical cleanliness have resulted in a lessened mortality? With one statement from the head of the Children's Bureau all this is swept aside as not being a medical problem.

"Ignorance and poverty"? If ignorance, what steps have the bureau taken during the past nine years of its existence to eliminate it? Wherein does this bill provide for the elimination of poverty?

Not one penny of this money appropriated by either the State or the Federal Government could be used to secure any necessaries of life, whether food, clothing, medicines or medical care, or a bed in a hospital for an expectant destitute mother. Section 12 of this bill provides:

No portion of any moneys apportioned under this act for the benefit of the States shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, erection, preservation, or repair of any building or buildings or equipment, or for the purchase or rental of any buildings or lands, nor shall any such moneys or moneys required to be appropriated by any State for the purposes and in accordance with the provisions of this act be used for the payment of any maternity or infancy pension, stipend, or gratuity.

The bill does provide (sec. 6) for assistants, clerks, office fixtures, and salaries and travel expenses of an army of amateur investigators, who will tour the country and tell other women how to raise children—or not to—as the "welfare of maternity" may seem to the Children's Bureau to require.

"Civic neglect"? New York City spends about $900,000 annually for its children's welfare bureau. This is in one city alone. Compare with that the ridiculously low appropriation of $1,240,000 for the entire United States, as proposed by this bill. How much will each county receive? New York City will not derive a single benefit from this appropriation, as its health department is separate from the State department of health, yet it will be called upon every year for five years to appropriate over 70 per cent of the $75,042 required to be matched by the State of New York in order to come under the so-called benefits of the act. This is taxation without representation for the city of New York in the State agency called upon under the act to cooperate with the maternity and infancy division of the Federal Children's Bureau, whose prenatal and postnatal care of our expectant mothers is intended as a panacea for all our evils. Exit home rule and mother—enter overparent, Federal and State, with its governmental institution motherhood. We are relieved of the say over our taxation; we are now to be relieved of the care of our children.

As originally provided and as passed by the Senate, this was an act—

For the public protection of maternity and infancy, and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States.

As amended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, the bill has now become a promotion scheme for the Children's Bureau—

To make or cause to be made such studies, investigations, and reports—

Section 3, collect—

5 per cent ($74,000) of the additional appropriations authorized for any fiscal year.

Section 5—

to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, * * * and to purchase such supplies, materials, etc., * * * and to incur such travel and other expense as it may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act.

All this under the high-sounding title, as amended—

For the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy, and for other purposes.

In 1915, 1916, and 1917, in 35 out of 48 States, there was introduced legislation generally known as health or social insurance. Among the many benefits provided were free medical care, nursing, and medicine. In addition thereto there was provided maternity benefits during the prenatal and postnatal period. Commissions were appointed in the States of California and Massachusetts, and after careful consideration and study these bills were rejected by these States. In New York State the bill was defeated in the legislature. This would seem to indicate the attitude of the States in which this legislation has been considered on questions of this type of so-called social welfare legislation.

In an article entitled "Social work as a profession for college men and women," by Kate Holladay Claghorn, of the New York School of Philanthrophy, written in 1915, appeared the following:

What distinguishes the new form [social work] from the old is, first, the requirement of professional standards of technique and skill; secondly, a money return for the exercise of that skill. * * *

A new and flourishing activity is that of medical social service. * * * What are the rewards in the profession after the college man or woman has chosen it? * * * The young man going into social work will usually find that his initial earnings will be higher than in the older professions, and later on he has rather more assurance of being able to command a salary of $2,500 to $3,500 within a few years than the average man going into law, medicine, teaching, or the ministry. There are some positions—and their number is increasing—which pay from $5,000 to $10,000.

In general, women are not in demand for the positions of greatest responsibility and highest pay. And certainly the names of Miss Addams in the settlement field, of Miss Richmond in organized charity, of Mrs. Kelley in the field of social legislation, and of Miss Lathrop at the head of the Federal Children's Bureau come at once to the mind as representative leaders, indicating that the higher reaches are not altogether barred to women.

In connection with the above it should be said that this article was written prior to the days of equal suffrage.

To those who have read the printed propaganda of the various organizations interested in this legislation, the names of Miss Addams as vice president and Mrs. Kelley as general secretary of the National Consumers' League will seem familiar. The gradual working out of the plan of 1915 has, after six years, culminated in the tremendous organized propaganda in 1921 in favor of the Sheppard-Towner bill and similar bills. In order to maintain schools of philanthropy, to teach social work as a profession, it is necessary to obtain jobs; hence the women's associations are led by those interested.

The Journal of the American Medical Association, voicing the opinions of leading physicians of this country, has this to say against the bill:

(1) The principle of Federal State aid as a means of financing public health work is an unsound financial policy; (2) public health work, except those activities which are clearly national in character, is essentially a function of the State and local government and should be paid for out of State and local funds; (3) no such emergency exists as has been claimed, and there are no reliable statistics by which it can be proved that the United States stands seventeenth in maternal death rates; (4) the means provided in the bill will not afford an effective remedy for existing conditions; (5) and most important, if the Federal Government intends to inaugurate activities for the care of maternity and infancy, or for any other public health measure, such work should be placed in the hands of the United States Public Health Service rather than under a bureau of the Department of Labor.

The Professional Guild of Kings County, with its member societies, the Medical Society of the County of Kings, Kings County Pharmaceutical Society, Kings County Dental Society, Eclectic Medical Society, Greater Ridgewood Medical Society, Greenpoint or North Brooklyn Medical Society, Bay Ridge Medical Society, Brooklyn Medical Society, Brooklyn Surgical Society, Brownsville Apothecaries Society, Second District Dental Society, Homeopathic Medical Society, Pharmaceutical Society of East New York, Flatbush Medical Society, East New York Medical Society, Williamsburg Medical Society, and Greenpoint Dental Society, has gone on record as opposing this legislation and sent their executive secretary, Dr. A. F. Lent, to Washington to work against the passage of this bill.

The medical profession, the most humanitarian profession of all, in intimate contact with those whom this bill is sought to benefit, have so far as they could, without lobbyists to present their views, opposed this bill as vicious, unnecessary, and unwarranted.

To sum up, legislation of this sort is an appropriation without a benevolent purpose. It is not even half-way honest socialism. It is an attempt to create political jobs for organized social welfare workers. It does not protect maternity nor infancy, but merely provides the money for a national lecture bureau in each State contingent upon the appropriation of an equal sum of money by the State and serves as an entering wedge for these organized social welfare movements and as a lever to force the States into establishing bureaus or agencies to cooperate with the Federal Children's Bureau. The acceptance of the money would be contingent upon the approval by the Chief of the Children's Bureau of the State's plan of cooperation. It is vicious legislation, paternalistic in character, and should not receive the support of any Representative who truthfully represents the desires of his district to settle its own affairs in a manner which will conduce to the best interests and welfare of the residents therein.

The Maternity Bill.

OF
HON. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER, OF NEW JERSEY,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Saturday, November 19, 1921.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, motherhood and infancy are the sweetest things in life, the blessing of the home, and prized by every good man and woman. They are sacred. Parents and women throughout the land give their chief thought to making their young people happy by settling them in marriage and home. When we pass from the household the medical profession devotes itself principally to the care of mothers and children. Schools, hospitals, and clinics aid in this, and the church advises. The health and welfare of the mother and the child is a matter for every home, town, and State, dear to my heart and to the hearts of all.

This is not a matter for the United States. Federal interference with local responsibility can only do harm. I hope I am mistaken in this, and will do all that I can to aid the purposes of this bill. But I fear that it will only impede good work.

By its provisions the United States is undeniably to interfere with local control. A mere pittance is to be paid to each State if the State makes a like appropriation and if it establishes a bureau and plans which are approved by a central board in Washington. The amount appropriated is so small that it does not aid the States appreciably though it is perhaps enough to make them hunger for more and to reduce the responsibility which the locality now feels for its work.

Experience has shown that State courts have lost their character when the community gets to rely on the United States courts. Action by the General Government is appropriate when no locality can do the work, as in stopping epidemics, plagues, and pests, but is not contemplated by the Constitution or by our scheme of government where the work, as in this case, is acknowledged to be local. Experience will prove whether or not local professions, churches, and charities are willing to subject their work for the mother and infant child to the plans and dictation of a board of officials in Washington, and whether supervision by Washington officials and appropriations from Washington will increase the interest in this work or induce our people rather to say, "Let the United States do it."

I have consistently and continually voted against bills for State aid by the United States in purely local matters. I voted against the roads bill, the agricultural loans bill, and a host of others. Local self-government is the foundation of real freedom and of our system wherein the independent citizen has a voice in governing his own affairs. We have tried United States schools in the Indian Territory without much success; many of us believe that the mother and child will be better taken care of if the State and the community are not interfered with by meddlesome United States officials. What is done from a distance is never done well. Every local board of health, every physician, every clergyman, and every neighborhood should feel its responsibility directly for the mother and children, and I wish to do my best in that regard, but I could not vote for a law which will put a bureau and a board in Washington, even in nominal charge of their activities. The many friends of this bill, and those who do not support it, have the same purpose and aims, but can not agree as to the means.

The act is strangely vague as to what is to be done. The appropriation to the State is conditioned upon the establishment of a special State bureau according to its adoption of a plan that is approved by a central board in Washington. Propaganda by reports of the Central Child Labor Commission is expressly authorized.

The Central Government can not really do anything. Many States will pay in more than they get.

The propaganda from Washington on such a sacred subject as maternity may be such as the State may not approve.

This small appropriation will do practically nothing and is the entering wedge for large claims. There is nothing to be done that can not be done cheaper and better in the State and without the establishment of costly bureaus.

The bill does not say how the money is to be spent, whether on publicity lectures, hospitals, doctors, salaries, or what not. It is not determined by the bill but to be appropriated by the bureaus under supervision of the board. As a rule a law should determine the method in which money should be spent. So far it is a matter of bureaus and publications. The bill prohibits entering homes and taking charge of children without the parents' consent, but seems to license inspection in schools, a thing that this House refused the other day to allow in the District of Columbia. By section 12 the money can not be used for rentals or for any maternity or infancy pension stipend or gratuity, and the Washington officials, by sections 10 and 11, supervise the State expenditures. But where the money is to be spent, except in bureaus or salaries, does not appear. Plainly it can not be used to help the mother or child directly.

This scheme is not within the general purposes contemplated by the Constitution. It is part of the already vast legislation by which it has been attempted to invade the local reserved powers of the State, and to secure control of State action by gifts of public money. Local self-government is the only means by which freedom can be retained, by which Government can be inspected, understood, and controlled by the locality, and by which each neighborhood can be made to feel its own responsibility in taking care of its own people, and especially mothers and children, so that each man becomes his brother's keeper.

I have opposed centralization and invasion of State jurisdiction consistently and continually. I fear that no good can come from this bill, and very much harm, and my sympathy with the high purpose of those who advocate it did not induce me to favor a measure which, in my judgment, will work the other way by allowing the State and locality to shift its responsibilities to the United States, and by establishing a distant centralized control of what should be done at home.

Limitation of Armament.

OF
HON. JOHN PHILIP HILL, OF MARYLAND,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, November 23, 1921.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, "Less of armament and none of war!" Thus, while the hush of sorrow for the unknown American soldier dead still hung over us, the President of the United States, speaking to all the peoples of the world, voiced, as he opened the conference on limitation of armament, the aspiration and the policy of the American people. Echoing his expression of our policy of peace, throughout the land rose a prayer against war:

O God of Love, O King of Peace,
Make wars throughout the world to cease;
The wrath of sinful men restrain,
Give peace, O God, give peace again.

Of all the events that have transpired in the days of this special session of the Congress, of all the great happenings that have become world history since the first armistice day, November 11, 1918, nothing has so thrilled the world as the words of the President, "Less of armament and none of war," followed immediately by America's submission through Secretary Hughes of "a concrete proposition for an agreement for limitation of naval armament."

I stood at salute on a troop-lined bridge in Paris December 14, 1918, when a President of the United States crossed the Seine to open the peace conference. The eyes of the world centered there. The world's eager craving for peace centered there. But in the hall of the Daughters of the American Revolution Building in our own city of Washington on November 12, 1921, came finally to the world the extraordinary combination of aspiration and practicability, of ideals and sacrifices that bids fair to bring permanent peace to the world.

Following the teachings of Washington, of Lincoln, and of Roosevelt, I have advocated for many years armament sufficient to support the American policy of peace, for always, for our national protection, armament must be determined by policy. I supported in this House of Representatives the programs of the administration for the Army and the Navy, and I welcomed the chance to do so. What I said January 25, 1916, to the people of Baltimore we realize even more fully to-day than we did then.

War as it is waged to-day is frightful, unromantic, and gruesome. Real war has always been thus. When nation fights nation for existence; when man fights man for the protection of home, wife, and children; when the contest for the survival of the physically and mentally strongest is waged in earnest, the splendor of armed pageants is laid aside. Asphyxiating gases, submarines, airplane raids, burning villages, devastated cities, cold heaps of corpses are the trappings of modern warfare.

It took the World War to teach us what real war meant. The policy of the United States is the same to-day as it was in 1916—security in the widest sense. In 1916 we made the mistake of thinking that virtuous policy is self-supporting and does not need armaments. England made the same mistake. The war taught us that policy and armament are inseparable. But to-day the great powers of the world are here, sincerely and eagerly laboring for the limitation of armament to the policy not of aggressive war but to the policy of peace.

The world wants peace. No nation or men desires peace more than those who have known war. Armaments are relative. Navies strong enough to support the policy of peace mean navies of relative strength. America, voicing the universal demand for peace, came to the heart of the matter on the day following Armistice Day. Secretary Hughes said:

The only hope of limitation of naval armament is by agreement among the nations concerned, and this agreement should be entirely fair and reasonable to the extent of the sacrifices required of each of the powers.

Then for America he made a concrete proposition for the limitation of naval armament which has been received as fair by the powers of the world. America on the day following Armistice Day made her great practical demand for peace. She showed her sincerity by offering at once to scrap 600,000 tons of capital ships, projected and under construction. The greatest happening during the days of this special session of Congress is this "concrete proposition" to limit armament to the policy of peace.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARION E. RHODES,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 23, 1921.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address:

ADDRESS OF HON. MARION E. RHODES, OF MISSOURI, DELIVERED BEFORE THE INTERNATIONAL FIRST-AID AND MINE-RESCUE MEETING HELD AT ST. LOUIS SEPTEMBER 3, 1921.

When the early statesmen were confronted with the problem of forming a Constitution for the government of the thirteen original States, they were providing for a relatively small group, bordering the Atlantic Ocean, in which none of the complex problems of industry had been developed. Mining had not arrived at a stage where it could be called an industry. Science was virtually unknown in agriculture. Even the most prophetic mind in that gathering of "best minds" could not have foreseen the almost bewildering advance, not alone in territory but in the development of science and culture, which lay immediately before them.

From a position of relatively little importance in the world—a nation newly separated from its mother country—this Union has advanced to a place where, due to the ownership of public lands and guardianship over Indian lands, it is now one of the great owners of mineral wealth.

The mineral industry within the United States has also grown. In 1920 the mine products, raw and manufactured, provided 60 per cent of all tonnage carried in carload lots by class 1 railroads. The raw mine products alone contributed 58.3 per cent of all railroad car-lot tonnage. Manufactured mine products were alone greater in tonnage than all other manufactures. Excluding all shipments of bituminous coal, the mining industry still provided in its raw materials twice as much tonnage as agriculture, two and one-half times as much as nonmining miscellaneous commodities, three times as much as forestry, and approximately twelve times as much as animal industry.

The early statesmen could not have foreseen this tremendous development of industry, nor could they have foreshadowed the development of governmental scientific researches on behalf of the public health and safety, of transportation, and of agriculture, mining, and other industries. Yet through the inclusion of the general welfare clause Federal assistance in the development of industry has been, more or less, dependent for authority.

Future development of this function of the Federal Government must be dependent upon a continued sympathetic interpretation of the existing clauses in the Constitution which concern the regulation of interstate commerce and property rights. Although the technical constitutionality depends on liberal interpretation, there are, nevertheless, several broad reasons why the Federal Government should be intimately associated with industry in the development of natural resources.

The resources of the Nation are limited. The supply is an ever-decreasing one. Mineral products can not be grown, like agricultural products, year after year from the same ground. With each year's production of minerals the point of ultimate exhaustion approaches closer by the amount of that year's consumption. It is the duty of the Federal Government to safeguard the welfare of the Nation by requiring that this one supply must serve for both the present and future needs, the future needs to be far greater than those of the present day.

In the mineral world of to-day and of years past there are and have been bodies of low-grade ores, for the proper utilization of which it has been necessary to evolve new methods of treatment. These methods can be evolved only after a detailed experimental study by technically qualified men. If the Federal Government was not able to assist in these studies, either the low-grade ore bodies would remain undeveloped or their development would be carried on by one of the larger mining companies which alone could finance the development. It has been the policy of the Federal Government to develop processes for the utilization of low-grade fuels and ores that these minerals might be made available for use, and, second, that the small operator unable himself to finance the necessary experiments, might share equally with the larger mine operator in the development of these properties.

Research by the technical experts of the Federal Government and a proper dissemination of the results achieved does away with the duplication of effort and the attendant increased expense which would ultimately be paid by the consumer if similar researches were carried on simultaneously by the interested States or by individual concerns capable of financing such work.

But there comes to the Federal Government an appeal which is stronger than those which refer to commercial processes or the economics of waste elimination. It is the united voice of the millions of men working in the various branches of the mining industry. It is the humanitarian appeal for the development of safer and more healthful working conditions in the mines.

It comes from the miners themselves, the men who are working under hazardous conditions, and it is a call which the Federal Government has listened to and will continue to listen to. The appeal for safety is made by the workingmen, many of whom are unfamiliar with our language, our laws, or our institutions, and many of whom have not yet realized the good will of any Government.

It is because of this appeal and because it is a function of our Government to protect life and preserve happiness that the Federal Government has a deep interest in the problems of safety in mines.

The Bureau of Mines was established in 1910, following a series of disastrous explosions, and was early charged with the specific duty of improving health conditions and increasing safety in mines. Its authority, however, is merely advisory. In the police authority of the States lies the power for the enforcement of mine inspection laws. The Bureau of Mines, and a consulting committee thereto, has prepared what is considered a model mining law, and the Legislature of Illinois adopted this at its last session. This is a particular instance in which the results of research by the Federal Government were adopted by a governmental branch which has the power to enforce its regulations.

The Federal Government advises and the State government enforces their regulation, and but little progress could have been made in the past, and little will be accomplished in the future, unless the Federal and State agencies are supported by a spirit of cooperation on the part of the miners and mine owners. The mine owner should adopt such safety devices as experiment and experience have proven successful and the miners should learn the significance and operation of these devices. Careless workers, who regard neither their own safety nor that of their fellow workers, are often responsible for accidents of a kind which could easily be avoided by a proper regard for safety suggestions developed through the united efforts of the Federal and State Governments and thoughtful mine owners.

The safety work of the Bureau of Mines is divided into two broad fields—first, investigation into causes of mine accidents; and, second, instruction in first-aid and mine-rescue work. The first phase may again be divided into, first, research into conditions which result in accidents; and, second, the development and instruction in the use of devices and methods which will permit operation without accident.

In the development of safety methods and devices a splendid work has been accomplished by the Bureau of Mines in its studies of the use of electricity in mines.

Electrical apparatus has become essential to the mining industry, but this apparatus must be safe when used in the form of explosive mixtures. Investigators early recognized the danger which lurked in storage-battery locomotives, in electrically operated coal-cutting equipment, in electric switches, in miners' electric lamps, and electrical shot-blasting machines, whereby the shot may be fired after all men are out of the mine.

Following various conferences in which the different conditions and equipments were discussed, the Bureau of Mines has been conducting experiments at its Pittsburgh station. It has evolved certain tests which all electrical equipment must undergo before it may be used with safety in gaseous atmosphere. Equipment which has successfully passed these permissible tests of the Bureau of Mines may be marked with an official stamp of approval. All equipment bearing this stamp has passed the Federal inspection tests.

This Federal approval system has taught the efficiency of safety and has actually resulted in the development of electrical devices to a point which probably would not have been achieved had there not been this system. The Federal Government, in this work, has received splendid cooperation from the manufacturers of electrical equipment.

The bureau also has emphasized the use of permissible explosives, with a short, quick flame, instead of black blasting powder, with a long flame and duration. Certain standards have been set which an explosive must meet before it may be classed as "permissible," one of which is that it will not ignite an atmosphere which contains 8 per cent gas. The use of permissible explosives in mines is on the constant increase.

There have also been studies on the question of mine ventilation, the explosibility of coal dust, accidents from the fall of roofs, and the establishment of automatic rock-dust barriers in the event of explosions. All of these developments have been a result of the work of that part of the bureau which deals with the conditions and causes of accidents and the prevention thereof.

The second phase of the safety work of the Bureau of Mines deals with research and instruction in first-aid and mine-rescue methods, including the use of oxygen-breathing apparatus. This work is educational. The Bureau of Mines sends out to the men in the mines pamphlets, called "Miners' circulars," which tell of the dangers in the mines and the precautions a man should take to avoid injuries and disease. Other publications dealing with safety are also issued. It was not believed, however, that the proper dissemination of necessary information could be obtained alone by the issuance of publications. There was established, therefore, a system of mine-rescue cars and trucks, operated by a personnel trained in mine rescue and first-aid methods. These cars and trucks visit practically each mining center in the United States and the operators cooperate with the mine owners in instructing and training their workers in first-aid and mine-rescue methods.

A further step has recently been taken. In cooperation with the National Safety Council a mining engineer of the bureau visits various mines and notes the progress which has been made in the use of safety devices and methods. As this work progresses, it is believed that it will develop into a practical safety device, whereby the engineer will be able to pass on to various mine owners and miners the suggestions which he has received as a result of his visits to other mines.

In cooperation with the Public Health Service the bureau has investigated the health conditions in certain of the metal mining districts where miners' consumption is prevalent and where the death rate from this disease was causing alarm. There has been shown to operators and miners the injurious effects of breathing poisonous dust and how, by the proper treatment of the rock dust, deaths from this cause may be greatly reduced, if not entirely stopped.

The Federal Government makes no claim to having first called attention to the high death rate among miners, nor does it claim to have been the first to urge the need of safer methods. It has welcomed the aid of all agencies that have sought to better conditions, and it freely concedes the credit that is due them for what they have done. The Government does believe, however, that its work has served to stimulate a nation-wide movement for greater safety in all industries, and that the value of this work has been great and can not be measured in dollars.

Splendid as has been the work of the Bureau of Mines in the conduct of its work and the justification for its organization which is found in the results achieved, it has not, by any means, completed its work. It has, in fact, only made a start. Every effort must be made by all concerned to achieve the condition of perfect safety. All organizations, Federal, State, and individual, must cooperate to this end.

There is no stronger plea which reaches the ears of Congress than that which carries with it the saving of life, and you may be assured, gentlemen, that the Federal Government will do its just share of this work.

On account of what has transpired in West Virginia the past few days, I can not refrain from making a few observations on the present unfortunate situation in that State before I take my seat. The day I left Washington I read in the public press that Mr. John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, had expressed his deepest regrets on account of the situation, and had tendered his good offices to the governor of the State toward a settlement of the trouble. Yesterday I saw a statement purporting to have been made by the governor of West Virginia charging Mr. Lewis with aiding and abetting the crime and lawlessness now rampant in that State. Such antagonistic statements coming from men of their respective prominence have a bad effect upon the public mind.

As a representative of the whole American people in a sense, I wish to sound a word of warning to both employer and employee. We have heard the story of oppression told by the workingman, as to how the heartless capitalist grinds labor under his iron heel. We have heard the mine operators tell how dishonest labor schemes to get something for nothing by pushing wages up to the top notch and shortening the hours of employment. If there be a small amount of truth in these statements, is it not about time the Government of the United States by the creation of some disinterested agency ascertain the facts in such disputed cases and let the public know who is to blame?

Labor represents a large group of respectable men. The mine operators of the country represent a large group of respectable men, but the public is composed of a much larger group, whose welfare is guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States. I know a vast majority of labor is honest. I know a vast majority of the mine operators are honest, but with the strike and the lockout on every hand the public is made to suffer. I hope the day is near at hand when the strike and lockout will cease. I plead for a better understanding between labor and capital. I plead for a deeper sympathy between employer and employee, and unless there be an improvement along these lines the Federal Government sooner or later will be forced to take a hand in the settlement of disputes between labor and capital in order to protect the public.

The American Legion—Burial of the Unknown Warrior—Arlington Cemetery—A Plea for National Unity.

OF
HON. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ,
OF WEST VIRGINIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 14, 1921.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert a speech made by myself before the American Legion at Welch, W. Va., on Armistice Day, November 11, 1921, which is as follows:

"Commander Eubank and members of the American Legion, ladies and gentlemen, no greater honor could have come to me than that carried by the invitation to address McDowell County Post, No. 8, of the American Legion. Upon the head of the official letter you sent me I read with interest and pleasure the legend, 'Our motto, 100 per cent Americanism; our aim, America for Americans.' The concise but highly expressive words you have selected to indicate the guiding rule of conduct and object of your endeavors may be condensed into one word—'patriotism.' In principle the love you hold for your country is not unlike that which you bear for your family. Home and country come first. To those we owe a primary duty, and after that, so far as we may be able to perform, a duty to all mankind. The activities of the Legion I have watched with the deepest solicitude.

"The measure introduced in Congress looking to the passage of an act authorizing the granting of a Federal charter incorporating the Legion came before the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I was then, as now, a member. Congress has always been reluctant to authorize the issuance of Federal charters. It had refused to incorporate the Grand Army of the Republic. My position in the committee, as also later in the House, was that precedent should be disregarded; that we had to deal with a proposition new in the annals of mankind; that there was no parallel in history for the World War; that even though prior Congresses had refused to sanction a Federal charter for those who had fought to preserve the Union of States, yet that this was no just ground for refusal; that the Civil War veterans, the grandfathers of our boys, would not take umbrage, but, to the contrary, would glady welcome favorable action on the bill. In the end, in spite of opposition, the bill became a law, and I am glad to know that those who worked and voted for the measure have no cause for regret.

"Of all the thousands of associations or organizations of people in this country my judgment is that the American Legion stands first in respect to power and influence in molding public opinion and in the accomplishment of the things that will in the greatest measure redound to the honor and glory of America.

"When I received from Mr. Ellison your most courteous and highly prized invitation to address this gathering of my own fellow citizens, conspicuous not alone for their courage and daring in time of war, but for good citizenship in time of peace, I reflected as to what I should do. The occasion was to be the third anniversary of the admistice. In Washington the day was to be made memorable by reason of two especially auspicious events that were to transpire, one being the ceremonies in Arlington Cemetery attending the burial of the soldier whose name is unknown and the other the convening, pursuant to a summons from the President, of the representatives of the leading nations of the world, having as their object the purpose of entering upon a plan to bring about a reduction, or at least a limitation, of the armament of the great powers, in the hope of promoting world peace. As much as I should have desired to remain in Washington and witness these great ceremonies—one of national and the other of international import—I felt that I would rather go to my own State and into my own district and be among my own boys on that great day.

"Before proceeding to the principal theme of the address there are one or two matters I desire in passing briefly to refer to. One matter is this: There are some who have seized the opportunity presented at this time of readjustment and unrest, when society is being agitated and is fitful, and are endeavoring to capitalize that condition in their own interest—political and otherwise—and to their own selfish advantage. I have in mind a case where there has been leveled a vicious attack not only against the honor of the clergy of a great church but the sacred virtue of its women—they who teach the youth of the land or who minister as nurses to the sick and suffering or, as in the case of the 'Little Sisters of the Poor,' who feed the hungry and clothe the poor, comforting the weak and heavy laden. It matters not how greatly we may differ with these our fellow citizens on the subject of religion—and the right so to differ is conspicuously safeguarded in that great fundamental instrument, the Constitution—yet we are bound to concede that as a class, in respect to the virtues—such as honor, chastity, good citizenship, and patriotism—the Catholics are absolutely invulnerable to attack.

"Another matter, to which I invite your attention, is the economic problem arising from the tendency of the people to gravitate toward the cities, towns, and villages. The ratio of increase of farms during the past decade was greatly reduced and the ratio of increase of the population in the rural parts of the country was far short of that obtaining in the urban communities. Something must be done to bring the population of the city and country into proper balance.

"The Government in many ways is doing what it can to encourage agriculture by aiding in the construction of good roads; by loans of money; by the dissemination of technical information as to the best methods to be pursued; by showing how farm life may be made attractive and profitable; also helping in other ways too numerous to mention.

"About 12 years ago at a meeting of the American Bar Association at Detroit I listened to an address by George Barbey, a distinguished lawyer of Paris, France. Barbey had been associated with Labori, the great French advocate, in the defense of Dreyfus, the army officer, and of Zola, the celebrated author.

"Mr. Barbey's subject was 'French family law.' In unfolding his theme he explained how, under the civil code of laws promulgated by Napoleon, the family, headed by the father having patriarchal control, was the object of supreme importance, and the method of attaching the family to the soil and of perpetuating ownership of the estate in the succeeding generations. A son could not marry until the age of 25, unless by the consent of the father. A father could not disinherit a son, but was compelled to give him a share in the patrimonial estate. Mr. Barbey then asserted that as a result of this system of jurisprudence France had become a nation of farmers and small land owners. That as a further result the people of France were independent, thrifty taxpayers, and he then inquired of his audience, 'In case of war which nation—the one whose people are freeholders, owning their own homes, or the one whose lands are held by a few great landlords—will fight harder for their country?' To ask the question was to answer it. The World War demonstrated the wisdom of the French policy. History does not reveal an instance where any people have fought with greater fortitude, tenacity, and perseverance than the French in the World War.

"It is, therefore, to be desired, from the standpoint of our own Nation, in the interest of its future welfare and safety, that the acquisition of homes and farms be encouraged, and this was the central idea of those who drafted the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill.

"Abraham Lincoln, standing upon the battle field of Gettysburg, in the presence of 100,000 people living and many thousands dead, referred to the unfinished work of those who had fought upon that field and of the necessity of taking up the task remaining with increased devotion and with high resolution, to the end that the dead had not died in vain.

"Our meeting here to-day will be as time wasted unless I shall be able to bring a message which will teach a lesson that will prove helpful.

"Ransacking the recesses of the brain as to what I should say, it occurred to me that the time was opportune for something to be said in the interest of national unity—a suggestion for a better understanding, a kinder feeling, and a more generous appreciation—the one for the other, among all our people.

"There exists as an aftermath of the war many dissatisfied and discordant elements. There is much of crimination and recrimination. Capital complains bitterly of the burdens of taxation and smarts under the restraints of unwarranted regulation. Labor cries out against reduction of wages and chafes because of unemployment and the high cost of living. The farmer rebels against the low prices for his products; the consumer and the traveler against high freight and passenger rates.

"The carrier complains that he is in a strait-jacket—manacled and shackled hand and foot. It is not my purpose at this time to enter upon a dissertation concerning the merits or demerits of these great public questions, the proper solution of which is of such vital concern to the people, but I will say that, to my mind, one of the chief causes of our economic woes consists in too much legislation, which gives rise to excessive regulation and interference with the business affairs and the liberties of the people, and which adds untold cost to the administration of government.

"It were better to abolish superfluous Government boards, bureaus, and commissions and allow, not artificial laws and rules, but natural economic laws of individual freedom, to govern, based upon the maxim that 'the people who are the least governed are the best governed.'

"May I now direct your attention to Arlington Cemetery. This beautiful national burial ground, embracing several hundred acres, was formerly the home of Gen. Robert E. Lee, and is situate on the Virginia side of the Potomac River, surmounting the hills, and in full view of the city of Washington. Every American citizen ought, sometime in his life, to make a pilgrimage to this sacred ground, for here repose many thousands of the Nation's illustrious dead. Monuments and tombs in marble, in granite, and in bronze proclaim the names and courageous deeds of the Nation's defenders. The right of every one who has worn the uniform of Uncle Sam to be buried in a national cemetery is safeguarded by statutory law. One section of the cemetery is devoted to Union soldiers of the Civil War, and another section to the Confederate soldiers, and I may say in passing, that no more beautiful monument have I ever seen than the one, designed by Ezekiel, erected to the Confederate dead. Encircling the stately shaft is the significant inscription 'And they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks.'

"There is also the Spanish War section, wherein, located in a circle surrounding the old mast of the battleship Maine, rest the bodies of the brave men whose lives were lost when that vessel sank in Habana Harbor. More recently there has been set apart a large area designated as the European war section. Here are to be seen thousands of new-made graves. Not many days ago, with the father of a young man born and reared in Wayne County, and who lost his life in the Argonne Forest, I went to Arlington to witness the reinterment of 68 soldiers, including this son, brought from France to the end that their bodies might have a final resting place in the bosom of their own country.

"At this great military funeral, accompanied by all 'the pomp and circumstance of war,' amid the resounding volleys of gunfire, the deep tones of the brass-throated instruments of the band voicing the funeral dirge—the solemn notes changing from the sad and mournful to others expressive of hope and triumph—amid it all, my attention was centered upon the friends and loved ones assembled there. The graves were numbered and in rows. The caskets had been lowered. The mourners were gathered to their proper places. For not a few of these dead soldiers there was no friend or relative present—none save Uncle Sam; but at other graves it was different. At one I saw a mother with her seven remaining children, some of them little fellows, huddled around all that was mortal of the eldest son and brother who had died far from home; at other graves I saw stern-faced fathers, but with look of 'solemn pride.' At one grave in particular I observed a good old mother, just a plain country woman with faded bonnet, solitary and alone, giving way to expressions of unutterable grief. The funerals thus far had in Arlington, of men who died in the European war, were of soldiers whose names are known.

"One of the sad incidents of the war was the total obliteration of the personal identity of many of those whose lives were sacrificed. On the list of casualties many were marked 'missing.' Some of these were blown to atoms, others were buried by the force of exploding shells, and still others either mangled beyond recognition or their identifying tags lost in battle.

"In commemoration of the life and heroic service of these 'unknown dead,' and as a testimonial of the appreciation of their fellow countrymen, France led the way by carrying to the city of Paris and reinterring under the Arch of Triumph the body of one of her 'unknown.' England followed by bringing home an 'unknown' British soldier and entombing his body in Westminster Abbey, where so many of England's illustrious men and women—soldiers, statesmen, and scholars—are taking their long sleep.

"In accordance with these precedents, and in harmony with the sentiments of our own people, the body of an American soldier, whose name is unknown, and who fell on the fields of France, was brought home on a battleship, taken to the Capitol of the Nation, and in the Rotunda under the great dome—on the precise spot where the remains of martyred Presidents have rested—left in state until this day, when that body, borne upon a caisson, followed by the Chief Executive of the Nation and the representatives of the people, and the people themselves, was taken to Arlington, and there, under the most solemn rites, buried in the land of that soldier's own flag.

"Around the hallowed spot all may gather. For the mother who lost a son reported 'missing' the grave will afford a special interest, for it may be the grave of her son. No one knows. One thing we do know, and that is that a mother, going down into the valley of the shadow of death, gave birth to that soldier. To every mother who lost a son in the war that warrior's grave will be as a shrine, typifying the grave of the one that she gave to her country. To the mother whose son returned in safety the grave of the unknown hero will be as a reminder of the escape from the peril that had thrown its dark shadows about her own boy.

"It may be inquired of what race or race extraction was this soldier? The answer is, we do not know. Was he a native born or a naturalized citizen? There is no means of telling. What was his color? We know not. He may have been a white man or a black man or he may have been a red man or a yellow man. What was his religion? His political faith? No one knows. He may have been a Protestant or a Catholic or a Jew; a Republican or a Democrat. We do not know if he was the son of a rich man or of a poor man, nor what his calling in life had been. He may have labored on a farm, clerked in a store, worked on a railroad, dug coal in the mines, or done something else. The mystery of the identity of this soldier and the particular circumstances attending his final ordeal are unknown and will never be revealed. Were it otherwise the whole object and purpose of the ceremony would be vitiated. It is enough for us to know that he wore an American uniform and that he laid down his life for his country. War is no respecter of persons. 'The high and the low, the rich and the poor,' without regard to race, religion, or color, must, when necessity demands, answer their country's call to arms. The Nation requires this to be done as a matter of honor and of self-preservation.

"In the world conflict our people acted in concert as one man and never stopped until the war was won. Three years have passed since the flags were furled.

"Is it not time that we were getting closer together and down to business? Let us have domestic peace rather than strife; harmony rather than disharmony; concord rather than discord. Should we not be more considerate of our neighbor? If we do not agree with him, at least respect his honest opinion, whether it concerns religion, business, or something else. Those responsible for widening the gulf between capital and labor—and I refer to agitators on both sides—should be silenced. The interests of capital and labor and of the public are mutual and interdependent. Neither of these classes can long prosper unless the other two classes also prosper.

"The rights of all three must be respected. Unless the tripartite implied compact is fair and just as respects all three of the parties, conflict will immediately arise and loss fall equally heavy upon all alike. Therefore let us have industrial peace. If men will only consult their better judgment, common sense will teach them that war prices had to come down, and this applies to everything—to the things we eat and things we wear; to rent, freight, and express rates, passenger fares, and wages. Bank deposits are shrinking, the volume of currency contracting. This is as it should be. Deflation must be completed. An orderly readjustment is going on. As good citizens we ought to encourage it. The grocer, the clothier, the landlord, the carrier, and the man who works with hand and brain, who accelerates rather than retards, who assists rather than resists these economic laws will not only profit in actual dollars and cents but will add to his capital a further asset of great value, namely, 'good will.' In the words of Father Abraham, let us 'highly resolve' that the dead shall not have died in vain and put that resolution into practice with the result that we will be better neighbors, truer friends, more loyal citizens, and thereby add to the sum of human happiness here and everywhere.

"Having done this, when the time shall arrive for our departure, our passing out will have been made easier.

"We can best manifest our appreciation of the soldiers who have gone down on account of military service by a more careful consideration of the claims of those who survive them. The soldier's widow and his orphan and the wounded and crippled soldier and the one who has suffered impairment of health and strength should, and beyond doubt will, be the object of the Government's most constant attention and care.

"As much as we mourn our dead and honor their memory, yet our present duty is in respect to the living.

"May the tie that shall bind us together as fellow countrymen and friends be the spirit of the gentle Master and our brother, the unknown soldier of Arlington.

"It does not matter as to whether the latter was a man of fortune or a son of toil. In either case the words of Gray, taken from the Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard, apply with equal force and beauty:

Let not ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys and destiny obscure;
Nor grandeur hear with a disdainful smile,
The short and simple annals of the poor.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike the inevitable hour:
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

"What is said and done here and elsewhere to-day can not affect the dead, for—

Can storied urn, or animated bust,
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Can honor's voice provoke the silent dust,
Or flatt'ry soothe the dull cold ear of death?

"Although we know not the name of the soldier and the others of his class, yet their actions are known. While we may erect, in honor of the great, marble tombs or granite shafts, yet the real object of this is to remind the living of the good deeds of those that are gone, in the hope that the living will emulate the illustrious example of the ones that are departed.

"The material out of which monuments and tombs are built will not last always. Marble will disintegrate, granite will erode and pass away, and bronze finally dissolve as a result of the corroding effect of time. Fame and honor, valor and virtue are the lasting monuments to the memory of a good man or a good woman.

"The good name and fame of these are the only enduring monuments. A kind word, a noble deed, an heroic act, duty well performed, a life well spent; these make character and reputation, which have an influence for good not only while we live but after we are gone.

"The soldiers, sailors, and marines who wore the American uniform and marched under the Starry Flag and suffered death have established for themselves a monument that time will not tarnish nor age destroy. That monument is everlasting and eternal.

"May I repeat three verses of the solemn measures of Col. Theodore O'Hara's immortal poem, 'The Bivouac of the Dead,' first read at the dedication of a monument raised at Frankfort, Ky., to soldiers from that State who had died in the Mexican War:

On Fame's eternal camping ground,
Their silent tents are spread,
And Glory guards, with solemn round,
The bivouac of the dead.

Nor shall your glory be forgot,
While Fame her record keeps,
Or Honor points the hallowed spot
Where Valor proudly sleeps.

Nor wreck, nor change, nor winter's blight,
Nor Time's remorseless doom,
Shall dim one ray of holy light
That gilds your glorious tomb.

"Members of the legion, as a parting word let me say it is my belief that the agents of the nations assembled in Washington will evolve and put into execution a plan for the reduction of armament, and when this is done our safety from external forces will have been thereby promoted; but as respects the defense of the Republic from internal foes, we put our faith and trust in the men who wore the American uniform in the greatest war of all time.

"The ex-service man, as all must concede, is the bone and sinew of the Nation. The brightness of his mind, the goodness of his heart, the intensity of his courage, and the purity of his patriotism are a sufficient guaranty of the ability and determination of the ex-service man to hold in check the venomous reptiles that prowl about in human form plotting to undermine the Constitution that was framed by the fathers and to overthrow our free Government that has been thus far maintained at a cost so great in human life and human suffering."

Curtailment of Armaments.

OF

HON. FREDERICK C. HICKS,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 23, 1921.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, the conference initiated by President Harding to consider the curtailment of armaments, is called upon to adjudicate one of the great problems of the age, a problem which has occupied the minds of men since that distant time when man first held a weapon in his hand and fought against his fellow for supremacy.

The President, steadfast in his patriotism, inflexible in his loyalty to country, with a vision of world-wide hopes and sentiments, touched the heartstrings of all humanity when in welcoming the delegates he said:

It is easy to understand this world-wide aspiration. The glory of triumph, the rejoicing in achievement, the love of liberty, the devotion to country, the pangs of sorrow, the burdens of debt, the desolation of ruin—all these are appraised alike in all lands. Here in the United States we are but freshly turned from the burial of an unknown American soldier, when a nation sorrowed while paying him tribute. Whether it was spoken or not, a hundred millions of our people were summarizing the inexcusable causes, the incalculable cost, the unspeakable sacrifices, and the unutterable sorrows, and there was the ever-impelling question: How can humanity justify or God forgive? Human hate demands no such toll; ambition and greed must be denied it. If misunderstanding must take the blame, then let us banish it, and let understanding rule and make good will regnant everywhere. All of us demand liberty and justice. There can not be one without the other, and they must be held the unquestioned possession of all peoples. Inherent rights are of God, and the tragedies of the world originate in their attempted denial. The world to-day is infringing their enjoyment by arming to defend or deny, when simple sanity calls for their recognition through common understanding.

Out of the cataclysm of the World War came new fellowships, new convictions, new aspirations. It is ours to make the most of them. A world staggering with debt needs its burden lifted. Humanity which has been shocked by wanton destruction would minimize the agencies of that destruction. Contemplating the measureless cost of war and the continuing burden of armament, all thoughtful peoples wish for real limitation of armament and would like war outlawed. In soberest reflection the world's hundreds of millions who pay in peace and die in war wish their statesmen to turn the expenditures for destruction into means of construction, aimed at a higher state for those who live and follow after. We are met for a service to mankind. In all simplicity, in all honesty and all honor, there may be written here the avowals of a world conscience refined by the consuming fires of war, and made more sensitive by the anxious aftermath. I hope for that understanding which will emphasize the guarantees of peace, and for commitments to less burdens and a better order which will tranquilize the world. In such an accomplishment there will be added glory to your flags and ours, and the rejoicing of mankind will make the transcending music of all succeeding time.

While the vast majority of persons unquestionably favor curtailing military establishments, there are some who honestly doubt if any agreement can be drawn which will be satisfactory to the powers involved. Personally, I do not share in these misgivings.

If all dangers that lead to wars, or the causes which provoke trouble, could be removed, it would follow as a natural corollary that there would be no need of great military establishments at all; but, unfortunately for society, it may not be possible to eliminate completely these causes. To reduce to a minimum the elements which incite distrust should be one of the fundamental considerations of the conference.

In a statement made by Gen. Wood a number of years ago he said that "nine out of ten wars are based on trade, the other one, perhaps, on race expansion, and in times past upon dynastic influence; but wars arise principally from trade." This statement, I believe, depicts a true conception of the causes of war. Commercial greed and territorial aggrandizement, due to the desire for new fields of exploitation, have been the heart and soul of most of the mighty tragedies that have subverted justice and battered the human race for centuries. Because commercial jealousies and trade rivalries are ever-increasing elements in our international relationships, there are many who maintain that wars are inevitable and that it is futile to hope for any limitation of armaments or for any agreement among the nations. Leaving aside the question whether war can be prevented, it seems indisputable that a limitation of armaments is in accord with the opinion of those who contended in the recent war and who hope that peace is something better than a mere truce.

It is admitted that any agreement to be effective must be founded upon mutual respect, confidence, and a thorough understanding of the aims and purposes of the nations which will be parties to the contract. Vast armaments are maintained mainly because of fear; fear is fostered largely by conditions—real or fancied. Remedy the conditions, adjust the difficulties, and fear will disappear. With the elimination of fear the necessity for huge military establishments will be removed.

There are certain basic questions which must be adjusted and determined. Upon their satisfactory solution will depend the success of the conference and the assurance that the terms of the agreement will be fulfilled. Without such a solution it would be futile to enter into any compact. That these questions are complicated and call for the highest degree of statesmanship, must be conceded; but with the world staggering under the trials and burdens of the recent war the very necessity of the hour will compel an adjustment of all difficulties.

Gen. Pershing, in his eloquent tribute to the unknown soldier whom France had honored as typical of the sacrifice of her poilus, voiced this noble sentiment:

> Comrade! In your heart there is malice toward none, but charity for all. You fought against a great calamity—war; but your work will never be ended till all peoples have rid themselves of the burden which preparation for war imposes. You gave everything for peace; but your sacrifice will be sterile unless a generous sentiment of disinterested cooperation replaces all hate.

In a recent hearing before the Naval Affairs Committee of Congress, Gen. Bliss, soldier and statesman, whose views are worthy of the deepest consideration, stated with emphasis that if the question of the limitation of military establishments could be submitted to the peoples of the world, to the man at the plow, to the man toiling in the factory and in the office, and to the woman in the home, there would be such an overwhelming verdict in favor of a reduction that the vote against the proposition would be a negligible factor.

Let us consider for a moment the cost of our own Military Establishments. For the year ending June 30, 1920, there was appropriated for war purposes, including pensions and care of the disabled, approximately $5,500,000,000, while $400,000,000 was expended for the civil functions of the Government. This is at a ratio of 93 per cent to 7 per cent. For the individuals who have suffered as a result of war there can, of course, be no limit to the expenditures made in grateful appreciation of their services. The reduction in expenditures, if they are to be made, must be made on the matériel side of the equation and in the account of maintenance of the establishments.

We will take up the naval side of the question, and glance for a moment at the unit cost of our fleets. We are now building 10 great battleships and 6 battle cruisers, costing approximately $38,000,000 apiece. Our destroyers and submarines are costing $2,000,000, and in some cases $4,000,000 apiece. The advent of the airplane and its adoption as a military weapon has made necessary a new type of ship, the airplane carrier. These vessels, outside of their equipment, will cost over $28,000,000 each, and the cost of the necessary aircraft will run into the millions. But these sums, large as they are, are only the initial costs, for in order to operate these ships thousands of men must be employed and provided for, enormous dry docks erected, and vast shops maintained.

An interesting comparison of cost can be made in the case of the battle cruiser Constitution. The old frigate of that name, Old Ironsides, with whose historic story every schoolboy is familiar, a ship which in her day was the pride of the Navy, cost $303,000. The new Constitution now being constructed will cost $38,000,000. This represents the naval development of a century and a quarter. The appropriations for the Navy for the year ending June 30, 1920, were $630,000,000; for the year ending June 30, 1921, $437,000,000; and it is probable that Congress for the year ending June 30, 1922, will appropriate $420,000,000. I merely mention these figures so that we may have some conception of what it costs to operate a navy.

While interesting, it is so plainly evident that it would be academic, to enumerate the number of schoolhouses which could be built or the number of roads constructed or the other beneficial improvements made with the money expended in maintaining our Nation on a great war basis. The loss of man power in productive fields caused by the employment of men in the operation of an excessive number of war vessels or engaged in the building of ships or the manufacture of munitions of war is of vital concern. Could these men be utilized in the arts of peace, the economic effect on our industrial life would be far-reaching and our problem of production and distribution vastly simplified.

An interesting comparison in the cost of our Military Establishment for the year just previous to the opening of the World War, for the year just previous to our entrance into it, and then for the year that terminated July 1, 1921, two years after its close, shows the following expenditures for our Army, Navy, and fortifications:

Army and fortifications	$101,150,000	$147,150,000	$413,500,000
Navy and Marine Corps	136,850,000	152,820,000	437,725,000

Should the conference come to an agreement which would enable us to cut our military appropriations in two, it would mean an annual saving of over $425,000,000, and this, translated into a reduction of taxes, would benefit economic conditions, stimulate incentive, and materially affect the life and prosperity of our citizens. Let us bear in mind that a reduction in our military expenditures of one-half would still give to these establishments after the war, over $125,000,000 more than was expended just before we entered the great conflict. Surely such a reduction is not unreasonable or in conflict with our national policies.

Nor will it render the Navy impotent. We must remember that sea power, when we have in mind the possibility of war, is comparative, and that naval strength of one nation is measured by the naval strength of another. When all nations proportionately reduce their floating forces the relative strength remains the same. What ever reduction in armament results from this conference, the people of the United States will have their taxes lowered proportionately. This makes it easy to understand the practical phase of the subject, for in the final analysis and in its application, it directly affects the purse of every citizen. Limitation of armaments is not a mere abstruse proposition for the play of statesmen and diplomatists. It is a concrete subject, a practicality which directly effects the cost of bread and shoes and rent and all the other necessaries of life. Therefore, the American people, in common with all other civilized peoples, should thrill with gratitude at the prospect of the success of the conference now in session.

In addition, an international reduction of armaments would, of course, mean that other nations would be able to effect economies in their military establishments. In the case of Great Britain, for instance, it would probably mean an immediate reduction of the debt she owes us, and this would further reduce our own taxes.

In viewing this question of curtailment of armaments it would seem that the discussion naturally divides itself among three classes: First, those who do not believe in curtailment of armament under any conditions; second, those who do not believe in maintaining military establishments at all; and, third, those who believe in a reduction of these establishments by international agreement. In the first class are those who claim that the lessons of the past prove that no plan of international agreement is practical and that force is the only factor respected in international relations. Personally, I feel that these persons, whose sincerity I do not doubt, while loud in their acclaim of the futility of compacts, are neither large in number nor sound in logic. Merely because wars have followed wars down the centuries, with their lessons of anguish unheeded; because treaties and agreements have been broken, do not seem to me conclusive arguments that no attempt should be made to reach a solution of the problem. It would be as reasonable to contend that because contracts in civil life are violated and criminal law broken we should abandon all courts and all lawmaking bodies, or because our grandfathers used tallow candles and stagecoaches it was foolish for anyone to experiment with the electric light or the automobile.

These advocates of mighty armaments employ the annals of the past to prove that in the failures of international agreements, history but repeats itself and will continue to repeat itself, and therefore no change is possible. It would seem to me more in accord with the progress of enlightenment to look upon history not merely as a dead record but rather as a living guide to direct our thoughts and our purposes toward greater achievements, to inspire us by the good that was accomplished and at the same time warn us against the errors that were made.

Conceding that wars may occur again, that possibility does not relieve us of the responsibility of seeking to formulate some plan by which the chances of their recurrence may be reduced to a minimum or excuse us from making every effort to reach an understanding with other nations for the reduction of the burden in anticipation of them.

In the second class are those who are opposed to armaments per se, and who, therefore, advocate immediate reduction or disarmament, irrespective of the action of other nations. They employ as their slogan the catching phrase, "The way to disarm is to disarm" and put forward the proposition that without an agreement, an example on our part will lead other nations to disarm. While I realize the potential influence of America in the politics of the world, I doubt if the world itself is willing to follow our lead unquestioned. We are living in a troubled era, with the danger of war ever present, and, in my judgment, it would be an unwise and an unjustifiable policy for this Nation to reduce armaments as an independent action.

Ex-President and Chief Justice Taft has said that—

> Until all nations strongly armed reduce, every wise nation will insist on providing and maintaining an armament enabling it to make effective defense against the possible unlawful aggression of any other armed nation.

These advocates of disarmament as an independent action also assert that moral suasion will accomplish the desired results. I appreciate the potency of argument and the value of calm consideration and the earnest presentation of a proposition, but I doubt if any of these factors will be sufficient to cause a reduction of armaments by other nations.

In the third class I put those who favor curtailment of armaments based on an international agreement, and here let me quote from a speech of Gen. Pershing delivered a year ago:

> It is time that enlightened people everywhere should undertake to reach some rational agreement which would not only relieve the world of its heavy financial burden but which in itself would go far toward the prevention of war. Expenditures must be lowered everywhere if financial stability is to be restored and if the nations are ever to pay their debts. Until stability is restored none can have the prosperity that comes from a free and uninterrupted flow of products from one country to another. But this can not be done if huge sums continue to be appropriated for the maintenance of large armies and large navies. As we consider the causes of the World War and comprehend its horrors, every thinking man and woman must feel that measures should be taken to prevent another such calamity. One step in that direction would be to reduce expenditures for armament, but one nation can not reduce armaments unless all do. The safety of humanity of the future—indeed, the peace, the happiness, and prosperity of the race—all appeal alike for an early consideration of the question of limitation of armaments.

In that statement I believe the overwhelming majority of the American people concur.

To those who say that an agreement is but a mere scrap of paper, I answer by saying that I still have faith in the integrity and the sincerity of international compacts, and am not yet ready to admit that deceit and duplicity control the actions of men or of nations. The most striking example in recent history of the efficiency of an international compact can be cited in the agreement which holds inviolate the boundary line between this country and Canada. Without fortifications or dreadnaughts, without guns or bayonets, with nothing more deadly than customhouses, that line, while separating two great peoples politically, is yet a chain which binds them together in friendship, in respect, and in mutual confidence. If civilization can not meet the issue and abide by an international agreement, whose sole purpose is the betterment of that civilization, then I fear civilization is not worth the cost it has been to humanity through all the ages.

> But if we are warned by the inadequacy of earlier endeavors for limitation of armament, we can not fail to recognize the extraordinary opportunity now presented. We not only have the lessons of the past to guide us, not only do we have the reaction from the disillusioning experiences of war, but we must meet the challenge of imperative economic demands. What was convenient or highly desirable before is now a matter of vital necessity. If there is to be economic rehabilitation, if the longings for reasonable progress are not to be denied, if we are to be spared the uprisings of peoples made desperate in the desire to shake off burdens no longer endurable, competition in armament must stop.
> Competition will not be remedied by resolves with respect to the method of its continuance. One program inevitably leads to another, and if competition continues, its regulation is impracticable. There is only one adequate way out and that is to end it now.
> We can no longer content ourselves with investigations, with statistics, with reports, with the circumlocution of inquiry. The essential facts are sufficiently known. The time has come, and this conference has been called, not for general resolutions or mutual advice, but for action. We meet with full understanding that the aspirations of mankind are not to be defeated either by plausible suggestions of postponement or by impracticable counsels of perfection. Power and responsibility are here and the world awaits a practicable program which shall at once be put into execution.

To my mind an agreement with the world powers to reduce armaments and to limit their production is the only safe, the only logical, solution of the problem, and I believe that America, free from international complications and entanglements; free from the centuries-old prejudices which have kept Europe in a state of turmoil for a thousand years; free from thoughts of aggrandizement or of territorial aggression, occupies the position in the world to-day which compels her to assume the responsibility of bringing about such an international convention. The reduction to be beneficial must be drastic; the agreement to be effective must be sustained; courage and determination are essential to inaugurate it; honor and integrity are requisite to maintain it.

In the absence of any compact between the great powers it is evident that competitive building of naval armaments will continue, with their constantly mounting costs of construction and maintenance. Should this course be followed, financial bankruptcy confronts the world; but the hope is ever present within me that the time will come when there will be lifted from the hearts of American mothers the fear of deadly conflict and from the shoulders of our citizens a part, at least, of the burdens of taxation due to vast military establishments. I feel this happy augury can only be fulfilled by an international agreement to limit armaments, and I sincerely hope that we are at the dawn of a new era when the ideals of justice, of mutual confidence, and of lasting peace will shed their beneficent mantle over the world.

HON. ZEBULON WEAVER,

OF NORTH CAROLINA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 23, 1921.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address:

ADDRESS OF S. M. BRINSON AT ANNUAL MEETING OF NORTH CAROLINA SOCIETY, WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 4, 1921.

Mr. President, two elements are essential to the development and permanency of a wholesome civilization and government, one spiritual (not in the ecclesiastical sense) and the other practical. A people wholly idealistic, given to dreaming dreams and taking no practical thought of the things about them, can not survive in a practical age.

On the other hand, those whose bent of mind is purely materialistic, who can not reach above the prosaic and practical things about them, can not, in the nature of things, feel the thrill which stirs to heroic action a people with a fine spiritual vision.

The sordid things of earth will hamper and hinder and finally destroy a government and a civilization, as have happened many times in the past, which have not the inspiration of a high ideal.

A happy combination of these qualities ought to make a happy and contented man and, in the aggregate, a happy and contented community and State.

Ancient history gives us many illustrations of the materialistic type, but a few with the distinctly spiritual or idealistic bent.

National decadence finally brought all these nations to their end, and the reason or explanation is traceable directly to the lack of one or the other of these two essentials.

Our own Union of States illustrates my meaning better, perhaps. We have States whose sole aim seems to be the building up of an industrial civilization and are boastful only of their progress along material lines. They seemingly are only interested in the legislation which concerns them immediately and that, too, which has only a business or commercial significance.

There are other sections of our country which—judging by the attitude of their Representatives here—are concerned only with the great national problems having to do with the rights and duties of citizens and the development of a high order of citizenship.

I am glad to believe that North Carolina represents in happy union these two types.

Perhaps we are more practical than were our fathers. It would be strange were it otherwise as the age in which we live is intensely practical—more practical than ony other period of our country's history.

There is this to be said, however, that, practical as we are, despite our strides in every line of business, we are yet holding to the faith of our fathers, we are honoring the great history and traditions of the past, we are clinging steadfastly to the ideals of the men who had most to do with giving shape and dignity and power to the Nation in its early days.

North Carolina lives in the past only to the extent of honoring the memories of and deriving stimulus from the noble men and women who filled that past with heroic achievement.

We are living in the present and meeting its problems in an extremely practical way.

There is too much to do in the throbbing, bustling, highly competitive present to spend our days in useless repining or in vexing our souls with vain contentions over settled issues.

When we shall cease to honor the memory of our fathers, we shall prove ourselves unworthy the sacrifices they made for us.

When we shall cease to make the most of the present and to continue to build upon the foundations they so wisely laid, when we shall cease to develop to the point of greatest usefulness the wealth nature has placed at our door, we shall be equally recreant and unworthy our splendid ancestry.

North Carolina of the present is not guilty of recreancy in either respect.

We tell upon our flag the tale of our priority in declaring our independence of Great Britain and establishing a Constitution of our own choosing for our guidance and control.

Our histories truthfully recite the repulse of British troops upon our soil and the vast significance of it.

How our people withheld their sanction to the Federal Constitution until civil and religious liberty was guaranteed in that instrument is known to every school child in our State.

How we left the Union rather than furnish troops to coerce our southern sister States, who—whether wisely or unwisely—were asserting a right unquestionably theirs, is known to all who read history with unprejudiced minds.

It is no news to any North Carolinian that our State furnished more fighting men to the Confederacy than we had voters, and that these men with courage undaunted and zeal unflagging followed the fortunes of the Confederacy even to the last hour of Appomatox and fired the last shot in that final and fateful struggle.

It is not surprising that a State which has held its rudder so true to the course of honor and duty should develop within its borders and to the extent of its ability those agencies which give sane and wholesome care to all its unfortunates and furnish training to all for the solemn responsibilities of citizenship.

Our educational and eleemosynary institutions lie near the heart of the State and are now being generously provided for.

The last session of the legislature provided by bond issue something like $12,000,000 for the enlargement and improvement of these institutions.

The various counties, cities, and school districts have voted more than $10,000,000 this year for the improvement of local educational facilities, and indications are that this amount will be doubled before another year passes.

A quickened educational spirit is manifesting itself throughout the State.

This expression of interest in the higher and better things of life (I speak here of State or secular activities) accords fully with what we might expect of North Carolina when she discovers the need and finds herself equipped to meet it.

Fixed principles of honor and high ideals have characterized the State and been illustrated in her life from the beginning.

The world has not expected anything less.

The world had not thought, however, until recently that along with this adherence to the idealistic, this thorough committal to the high and spiritual, that there was in the State a robust, practical sense, the vision of an industrial empire, in the Old North State.

And yet, such we have come to be!

From the early days of our history until the Civil War we were—as was the South generally—almost wholly an agricultural people. Perhaps the character of soil and climate had much to do with that. Perhaps measurably it was due to ancestral trend of mind and talent.

Certain it is that until the Civil War we gave ourselves almost wholly to tilling the soil. Our labor was that of the unskilled Negro.

Our civilization, our social and industrial systems were absolutely revolutionized by the changed conditions following that war.

From dependency upon one industry and one type of labor we have diversified in both industries and labor.

North Carolina is rapidly becoming a great manufacturing State. The value of products turned out by the factories in this State increased from $289,000,000 in 1914 to $943,000,000 in 1920 (226 per cent).

The number of employees increased 26,000.

Capital invested in manufacturing enterprises increased within five years (from 1914 to 1919) $416,000,000 (163 per cent).

The pay rolls, salaries, wages, etc., increased in five years from $56,000,000 to $150,000,000 annually.

In 1919 Massachusetts led the States in value of cotton goods manufactured ($596,687,000). North Carolina came second with a value of $318,000,000. Massachusetts had at that time 191 cotton factories while North Carolina had 311, or more than any State in the Union.

Winston-Salem is the largest tobacco-manufacturing city in the world.

Durham has the largest hosiery mill in the world.

Wilson is the largest bright tobacco market in the world.

Gaston County has the largest number of cotton mills of any county in the world.

High Point is the second largest furniture-manufacturing city in the country, Grand Rapids alone leading her.

We have occasion for rejoicing in the wonderful growth of manufactures in our State. With our splendid water power, our varied soil, our large unexplored mineral resources, our vast stretches of forests, no one can adequately picture in his mind what large expansion and development the future holds for us in manufacturing.

But, my friends, I believe with all my soul that North Carolina's best development in the future lies in that ancient industry, agriculture. I believe the happiest, most contented people are those who live close to nature, who furrow the fields with the plow of peaceful industry, and each year can see nature yielding of her wealth at the touch of the hand skilled in farming.

The finest civilizations, it seems to me, have been those builded upon agriculture.

North Carolina's progress in agriculture has been marked—due, I think, largely, to the application of science our State has been giving to it.

In 1920 we led every southern State in relative crop value—25 per cent more than the average of preceding five years.

In 1909 our crop value per acre was $18.77.

In 1919 our crop value per acre was $70.14.

In 1920 our State as well as the others felt the slump and showed a decrease.

The crop value of our State in 1909 was $142,000,000.

The crop value of our State in 1919 was $654,804,000.

The crop value of our State in 1920 was $412,373,000.

In 1920 the slump is manifest in the total crop value, and yet the value of the crop that year was about three times the value 10 years before.

Our relative standing in crop production in 1909 was nineteenth.

Our relative standing in crop production in 1919 was fourth.

I have given these statistics, few but significant, to show how our State has progressed along material lines. They fairly well indicate the spirit of enterprise so much in evidence in our State.

This progressive spirit is now finding vigorous expression along every avenue of State development.

Good roads will, in a comparatively short time, bring every neighborhood in the State in easy reach and intercourse with every other neighborhood.

No State that I know of—certainly no southern State—will have as fine a system of hard-surfaced roads as will ours when the plans are carried out.

The isolation of rural life will soon be a memory in North Carolina.

Community life will now easily and naturally center about the churches and schools. Aloofness will soon give place to the fine play of the social instinct. This will make for the peace and happiness, the culture and development of the people, and in time will reflect itself in a finer quality of citizenship in both town and country.

When we reflect upon God's tender dealing with us and the generous supply of undeveloped wealth He has placed at our door; when we remember that—as yet—we are more fully American than any other State, the percentage of foreign born among us being the least of all the States (0.3 of 1 per cent), should not we feel that to us a peculiar mission has been given—the mission of showing to the world how a people and an organized State may, through industry and skill, accumulate rich stores of material wealth and yet hold the moral standard always high, clinging to the faith of our fathers, whose intrepid spirit brought them over trackless seas and through desperate perils of the forest to build here this great Commonwealth, whose children we proudly claim to be?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PERCY E. QUIN,

OF MISSISSIPPI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 23, 1921.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address:

SPEECH OF HON. JOHN R. TYSON AT EVERGREEN, ALA., ON NOVEMBER 11, 1921.

I appreciate the honor of the invitation extended to me to be present on this occasion to join with you in observing this national holiday; to pay tribute to the memory of the heroes who gave up their lives on the field of battle for humanity and democracy; to render unto the living ex-service men that tribute to which they are so justly entitled by reason of their courage, fidelity, valor, and sacrifice.

This is a day worthy of observance by all civilized nations. It is the one on which the armies of the military dynasty of Europe surrendered and the armies of America, representing American principles and ideals, were victorious. The flood tide of democracy rose at Cantigny and swept on through Chateau-Thierry, Belleau Wood, and overwhelmed autocracy in the Argonne.

It was not until the Stars and Stripes, borne by free Americans, floated at the front that the tide of battle turned, resulting in a victory for American principles and ideals.

The armistice marked the fruition and inspired the world hope that the people of the civilized world would have a new birth of freedom; that all governments of the people shall be by the people and for the people.

To-day in Washington memorial services are being held, participated in by representatives of the earth's great nations, in honor of an unknown American soldier who lost his life on the field of battle in France. Nothing will be left undone to express the grief of the Nation and its reverence for its dead heroes, many of whom sleep in the poppy fields of Flanders, whose names are unknown. They are, however, known to and still live in the hearts of this great people and in the hearts of the loved ones at home, who made the sacrifice for the love of their country and their God.

At the great gathering to do honor to the unknown soldier, who will rest beneath the majestic oaks in Arlington, the national cemetery, once the home of that great and illustrious Confederate hero, Gen. Robert E. Lee, situated on the banks of the beautiful Potomac, overlooking the capital city of the Nation, Alabama will be represented by three ex-service men, named by the governor, who distinguished themselves on the field of carnage and blood; and one other, as the guest of the Nation, in recognition of his courage on the field of battle, for which he has been honored by a congressional medal being presented to him, which, by his wearing, he honors.

Two of the four distinguished Alabamians reside in neighboring counties to this in this congressional district.

Richard A. McClure, one of those selected by the governor, resides at Troy, in Pike County, and the medal of honor man, Sidney E. Manning, the only one in Alabama who wears the congressional medal, resides at Flomaton, in Escambia County. The first, under the governor's selection, bears the distinguished honor of being the accredited representative of the over-sea veterans in Alabama; the other, the distinguished honor of being the accredited representative of the veterans of the Nation.

The fact that two of the four representatives from this State who will attend the memorial services are from this district should be a source of great gratification to us. But this is not surprising, as they are the sons of a great patriotic and liberty-loving people. They are worthy representatives of a great cause and of a body of as brave and gallant soldiers as ever buckled on a sword or shouldered a musket. I am, indeed, proud that I have the honor of representing so great a people in the national Halls of Congress. And prouder still am I that I have the honor to represent the veterans of Alabama and of the opportunity of serving those of them who are disabled, in prosecuting their claims for compensation, vocational training, and hospital service. A no braver band of men ever faced a foe in mortal combat than the Alabama boys.

It was the intrepid American soldier that saved the day for France and the world. It was his manly courage that put the Hun to flight and caused the Hohenzollern dynasty to plead for a cessation of hostilities and to acknowledge defeat. It was his unconquerable spirit that snatched victory out of defeat and planted the Stars and Stripes upon the ramparts of the enemy. It is to his unbeatable courage and his unknown meaning of the word "retreat" that England, France, Belgium, and Italy owe their future destiny. It is to him the people of those countries are indebted for all that is dear to them. It was he who saved them from oppression, serfdom, and poverty.

It is not to be wondered at that Marechal Foch, of France, the commanding chief of the allied armies, is here to pay tribute to their valor and courage; and that Lord Beatty, admiral of the English Navy, and Gen. Baron Jacques, of the Belgian Government, and Gen. Diaz, of the Italian Government are here to join in doing honor to the dead American soldier.

On to-day the body of that soldier will be taken from the rotunda of the Capitol Building, where it has been lying in state, to Arlington, followed by a long line of distinguished men and women. In that procession will be the President of the United States, his Cabinet officers, judges of the Supreme Court, Senators and Representatives in Congress, ambassadors and plenipotentiaries of allied countries in the war and of other countries, veterans, and other distinguished citizens.

The ceremonies will be of world-wide attendance and the reverberations of glory and honor to the name of the American soldier will be heard in every civilized country. The glory and honor achieved by him is the result of that individual independence inculcated and fostered by the character of the institutions and traditions of the liberty-loving people of America. The American soldiers are men, not mere machines. They think and act individually and collectively and often in battle, independently, when the necessity of the occasion demands. It is this independence, this self-reliance, this strong individuality that makes him the greatest soldier that ever girded his loins for battle. It is this that makes America the greatest Nation on earth.

A notable example of this is found in Sergt. Samuel Woodfill, recently decorated with medals as the foremost American hero of the World War by the United States, the Belgian, French, and Italian Governments. By his undaunted courage he cleaned out three machine-gun nests, killing 19 officers and men in a hand-to-hand encounter, in which he used a pick handle with deadly effect.

It is this characteristic that has caused the people of the United States to forge to the front and to maintain preeminently the position they have acquired in all lines of human endeavor.

Peace has brought with it many difficult problems that must be solved. These problems do not alone confront the people of this country, but they are world-wide. They are national and international. The great cost of the war has brought bankruptcy to the nations of Europe, unrest and discontent to their people. It has produced the necessity for the reconstruction of national and international policies. Those that obtained prior to the war will not serve to meet the new situations and conditions produced by it. Trade relations must be reestablished; systems of taxation must be revised and their burdens lightened; profits of the profiteer must be lessened; cost of living reduced; economy taught and practiced; paternalism, promoted in some degree necessarily by the war, abandoned; and facilities at reasonable rates for transportation of the products of the mine, forest, factory, and field must be provided. The spirit of peace, tranquillity, quietude, and contentment must be inculcated and nourished.

Looking to a solution, at least to some extent, of international questions, there will meet to-morrow in Washington the Armament Conference, which will be composed of representatives from the United States, Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, Japan, China, Portugal, and the Netherlands, having for its main purpose the working out of an agreement between those nationalities under which a limitation of armament may be consummated and the solving of other questions promotive of peace. The future peace and prosperity of those nations and of the world depend largely upon that undertaking. Should the effort fail, billions of dollars will continue to be expended yearly for the construction and manning of fighting machines and the financial status of the nations will still suffer further depletion and the present imminency of bankruptcy will be accentuated to a point where it will be a stern reality. It is an astonishing fact, but nevertheless true, that 95 per cent of all revenue collected by the United States Government is devoted to the liquidation of war debts and the maintenance of the Army and naval forces. The present indebtedness of the civilized world in the late war is, in round figures, $400,000,000,000, with an annual interest charge of approximately $20,000,000,000. This indebtedness must ultimately be paid or repudiation of honest obligations must ensue. It can only be paid out of revenue derived from taxes exacted of the people. A continued increase of the cost necessary to a continued increase of armament will increase the already appalling indebtedness and must finally result in national dishonor. Furthermore, it will continue to pile up the burden of taxation already being borne by an overtaxed people. It will stop enterprise, increase the number of unemployed, create distrust, disloyalty, and anarchy.

Fortunately for America, she is rich in resources and in a people of great constructive powers, possessing indomitable energy, capacities for producing wealth, capabilities for meeting every necessitous demand, and, above all, possessing a spirit which inspires love of home and country.

With such a people it is practically impossible that burdens will ever become so onerous, incapable of being borne, or that their Government will ever be forced in its functions to commit an act of dishonesty. But this can not be said of all the nations or of all the people represented in that conference. Already some of them are indebted to our Government in large sums and their obligations are already long past due. They have been unable so far to pay the interest which has long since accrued and will continue to accrue. That indebtedness aggregates the enormous sum of ten billions of dollars, with accrued interest of more than a billion dollars. Their ability to pay depends, in a large measure, on being able to collect the war indemnities levied by them against Germany. The German Government is practically a bankrupt. Her money is of little or no value, and yet there is no unemployed within her confines, and every mill and factory running to their full capacity and her foreign trade increasing by leaps and bounds. She presents the anomalous spectacle of a Government treasury apparently drifting to bankruptcy, with the value of currency issued by her diminished almost to the vanishing point, and yet the individual wealth of her tradesmen is sufficient to enable them to carry on a commerce on a basis that enables them to capture the larger share of the foreign trade of the world, in competition with other nations whose financial condition is on a sounder basis.

It is said by Simonds, one of the ablest writers on international questions, that the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, will urge in the conference, as the American policy, "The reestablishment of the doctrine of the open door; the international recognition of the principle of the integrity of China; the destruction of the Anglo-Japanese alliance."

The open door will mean that, in China and Siberia, every nation shall have the same rights as any other nation and that American economic interests in those countries shall not be destroyed or impaired as the result of political control by any other Government. It will be contended by our representatives in the conference that the alliance, known as "The Anglo-Japanese alliance," between Great Britain and Japan is the power which enables Japan to threaten the doctrine of the open door and the principle of the integrity of China. It is believed that it is by virtue of that alliance that Japan has been able to produce a situation in the Far East far more serious than was ever contemplated by the civilized world. That alliance, by virtue of being made with the greatest naval power of the world, has enabled Japan to assert and enforce demands in China which she would never have attempted but for the fact that she had the backing of Great Britain. But for this alliance, other nations would not have permitted Japan to have abolished Korea by conquest and annexation, nor would she have been allowed to make China a semivassal State. The domination and control desired by Japan of the Far East is the real "yellow peril." The effect of the position of Secretary Hughes is to turn Japan out of China and force her to recognize, as a principle, the integrity of China and Siberia.

To the Japanese, says Simonds, we are in effect saying "Get out of China politically; get out of Siberia politically. Recall your troops alike from Russian and Chinese soil. Recognize that you have in both territories no other rights than those which belong to all nations, and note that your presence in those countries, your pretensions on the mainland of Asia, constitute not alone a violation of abstract right but a menace to the United States, so interpreted by it."

And according to that writer we are saying to the British, in unmistakable terms, "The evil course which Japan has followed in Asia is due, in no small measure, to the fact that she has been your ally and has exploited that partnership in Asia to her own advantage and to our harm. The price of American friendship is the abrogation of that alliance."

Should Japan stubbornly and persistently refuse to abandon her policies in the Far East by declining to recognize the principles asserted by Mr. Hughes, it is predicted that all discussion of disarmament or limitation of armament will become futile, the conference a failure, and the powers will continue to carry guns for each other, with an ever-increasing of instrumentalities to destroy human life and property. It is believed that Great Britain holds the key to the situation and can induce Japan to agree to the terms that will be demanded by the representatives of the Chief Executive of this Government or other terms upon which American interests in China and Siberia may be unhampered, protected, and advanced. Undoubtedly Great Britain has the power to coerce Japan to accept the terms under which the open door and the integrity of China and Siberia may be reestablished and preserved. A mere abandonment by her of her alliance with Japan will suffice to influence Japan to recognize those principles and secure to Japan and Siberia self-determination.

Of all the nations represented in the conference, France is, perhaps, in greater need of relief. She lies broadside west of Germany, her enemy for generations, and the indemnity levied in her behalf against Germany, if collected, will not pay the enormous expense now upon her for the support of the army she is maiataining to police various parts of Europe. At this time her army is the strongest in the world. The cost of her military establishment is immense and only a portion of it is being borne by Germany. Her people are desirous of increasing production and of reducing taxation. The greatest battles were fought on her soil and the destruction to the homes of her people, their farms, and their factories by the German armies is incapable of being estimated, running up into the hundreds of millions of dollars. She has felt and appreciates the devastating and blighting hand of war in all of its horrors, griefs, and sorrows. She suffered more during the war than any of the allied nations, except perhaps Belgium. She should appreciate, and no doubt does, the necessity of peace on a status, if possible, where there will be no more war.

She stands to win inestimable benefits at the conference and her interest lies in supporting her ally, this Nation, in that conference. The friendship between the two of long standing is perhaps stronger than ever before, and certainly her interest lies in the continuation of it and, if possible, the knitting together those bonds more finely. It will not therefore be surprising if her representatives lead in the discussion for the reduction of armament and be found to be the steadfast friend and supporter of this Nation on the Far Eastern question.

The nations whose representatives are in the conference will be put to the test, not of the sincerity of their peoples but of their ability to meet the universal demands for a permanent restoration of peace, prosperity, and happiness. Whatever may be the result of the deliberations, world conditions can not continue as they are. Our people do not "fear war, but they hate it." They are a peace-loving people, but when their country is menaced, they will fight with a fury that can not be withstood.

With the adjournment of the conference there will come to the hearts of the people who are represented in it either "a gladdening hope or a deepening despair." The friendship which now binds the nations together is perhaps and will be either strengthened or relaxed by the happenings at that conference. If the nations can not and do not get together on some plan promotive of the peace of the world there is little hope of their ever being able to do so. The plans proposed of relieving the people of the allied nations of the onerous burdens imposed by great armament will meet with less resistance now than ever before in the history of the world and the opportunity to remove the causes for future war, which still hovers over the Far East, was never more favorable than it is to-day.

The conference is but the beginning of a movement whose ultimate end will be, we sincerely hope, the fulfillment of the aspirations of the people of the civilized world, pursuant, we believe, to the divine plans of an all wise Providence.

Intimately related to the cessation of hostilities and as a result of a bloody war, in which many of the surviving veterans were disabled to pursue their former avocation, there was presented for serious consideration the obligation of this Government to provide for their comfort and well-being. Recognizing that obligation, it has made provision for their compensation, established hospitals for the treatment of those disabled by reason of wounds or disease, and provided vocational education with pay for those suffering from a vocational handicap by reason of their military service. But there is yet left unfulfilled the obligation of constructing means by which those who were not injured may in some small way be compensated for the sacrifice they made. I believe that this Government will ultimately live up to its just obligations, but should it fail, I commend to them the example of the Confederate soldier, who when discharged from the service was barefooted, ragged, and hungry, and tramped to his home in the far South from the battle fields of Virginia, weary and worn in body, but possessing the spirit of dauntless courage and a determination to rebuild the land he loved so well, made desolate by an invading foe.

During the late war the war powers conferred by the Constitution of the United States necessarily dominated the exercise and enforcement of other legislative and executive powers conferred by it, but with peace established the right to exercise and enforce those powers is at an end. This Government, therefore, is now functioning under the constitutional powers relating exclusively to peace conditions. These powers prescribe the authority and fix the orbit within which the rights of the citizen and the States are to be measured, regulated, and controlled. Usurpation, either by the legislative or executive branch, is dangerous to its stability and fraught with danger to its citizens. If not resented and restrained it may be destructive of the principles upon which this Union was founded and of the purposes for which it was promoted and established to accomplish.

On a recent visit to this State the Chief Executive of this Nation in a public speech reprimanded, if not indirectly, at least inferentially, the white people of the Southern States for their failure to accord to the Negro equal political rights. If this reprimand was uttered by him as the head of his political party, it was in bad taste and discourteous to his hosts, who were the white men of the South. If it was intended by him as an utterance as Chief Executive of this Nation, it was a misconception of the rights of the States and involved the assumption that the Nation possesses the power to regulate the right of suffrage and is under the duty to see that all citizens, especially the Negro, is secure in the exercise of those rights and is accorded such rights. He evidently overlooked the fact that the right of suffrage is not conferred by the Constitution of the United States, nor is it an attribute of citizenship, that the right is conferred alone by the States, and they alone possess the power to prescribe the qualifications for its exercise.

In this day of feverish reconstruction let us not forget the traditions of our fathers, the obligations we owe to the institutions established, fostered, and nourished by them, which made this Southland of ours "the land of the free and the home of the brave." Let us not forget to honor the boys who went to far-away France to fight the battle for freedom and humanity. Let us not forget those who have returned, upon whom rests the responsibility of maintaining with that same degree of fidelity that characterized their conduct in war the standard of liberty, justice, and honor inherited by them from their fathers and mothers. Let us never forget to honor the memory of the heroes who sleep in the poppy fields of France, in Arlington Heights, and other sacred places, honored by their heroic deeds.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. M. CLYDE KELLY,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, November 10, 1921.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that on to-morrow the body of the American soldier who will typify all our soldier dead will be laid to rest in Arlington, I desire to place in the RECORD a tribute to this soldier. It is an excerpt from an address delivered by myself on "The golden rule in international politics," on November 2, at the convocation for disarmament, held in Washington by the National Reform Association:

The unknown soldier. Ah, but he was not unknown to the mother and father, in East or West or North or South, who bade him good-by as he answered the call of his country, with pride gleaming through their tears. They saw him march forth in the flush and heyday of youth and gayety. Their love surrounded him in training camp, and as he sailed on transport through submarine infested seas. They scanned the news from the fighting front with fears as cruel as tigers clutching at their hearts. They read his letters with eagerness and ecstasy, and theirs was the love that sings and has wings like a bird. In rose-hued fancy they saw him home again teeming with life and throbbing with vitality and victory, to be their stay and solace. But there came a day of doom. A messenger handed a telegram to the mother at the door. Her heart pounding in her throat, her fingers trembling with terror, she opened the envelope. Only a line, "Your son * * * missing in action." Her head dropped into her hands like a storm-broken flower. Her mind was beaten to the earth. The father came and read and understood. Both felt a pain like a sword-thrust, the fear that they should never see their lad again. Then came long days of alternate hopes and fears; hopes unfulfilled and fears all too well realized. Weeks, months, and years passed with memories of their soldier boy forever echoing in their hearts. They sounded the depths and knew at last that their boy, in the screaming shell and battle hell of Flanders Field had paid with his life for his heart's desire. They know now that he will be interred among the Nation's great at Arlington, richly emblazoned with decorations of sparkling splendor. That lad who will sleep so serenely in America's hallowed spot is no unknown soldier; he is the boy of every mother and father who know the loneliness that is like a blow, the speechless, questioning sorrow of those who sent their best beloved forth for the Old Flag, only to have him fill a nameless and unmarked grave.

The unknown soldier. He was not unknown to his comrades, who, like himself, were eager and unafraid. He was one of the brotherhood with the fighting password, "All for one and one for all." He had shared their pains and privations, their adventures in front lines and in rest areas, and they knew him with the knowledge that men have when, as a matter of course, they face death together. In a flaming road of France one day he lay with his comrades in fox holes under the shell fire of the enemy awaiting the zero hour. At the edge of the woods, a mile away, was a machine-gun nest manned by artful and malignant enemies, which must be destroyed in order that the advance might proceed. Grim death reared his head there, but the lads did not reck or care; he had dogged their footsteps long, and they had grown accustomed to tremendous exploits and thrilling escapes. The agreed-upon moment came. Like a boy let loose from school and bound for new adventures, this lad leaped to his feet and with his comrades dashed across the popply-laden fields. There was a crashing din of bursting shells and the whistle of machine-gun bullets. They spurred and whipped the boy's tired body into fiercer action. Unfettered by fear, with all the magic of youth, and the zest of life strong within him, he strove to reach the objective. He reached it. He heard the cries of victory from his comrades. Then in the moment of triumph a sudden stinging pain struck through his breast. A ghastly whiteness overspread his face. He fell to his knees and his shaking hand went to the pocket of his blouse where a sheaf of his mother's letters had sanctuary. They were crimsoned with his blood. A thousand fleeting memories of his boyhood days unrolled before him and then faded in the darkness which enveloped him. A wordless farewell to his comrades, and there under a torn and tumultuous sky, still clutching his mother's letters, the soldier of America met his end, calmly as one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams. Soon came the fierce onset of the enemy and the khaki-clad legions were driven back to return in a few hours to reclaim and hold their vantage ground. But before they came the dead soldier was buried with the others who fell in the fray. When his comrades came searching identification was impossible. There by the mirroring Marne, in Belleau's torn and bloody wood, on Chateau-Thierry's summit, in San Mihiel's silent city, or beneath the ancient arches of the Argonne he lay until his countrymen came to reclaim his body and bear it back in triumph to lie in Arlington. Unknown, no; he was the comrade known to every man in the fighting forces of America; the stanch and steadfast friend who had disappeared in the fury of one day's battle and was never seen again. He was the buddy who went west when there was no mourning of farewell and no chance even to clasp his hand.

The unknown soldier. He was not unknown to America, in whose cause he fought with impassioned impulse. He is the man called million, upon whose mighty shoulders rests the rule of the Republic. He is the significant symbol of the rear rank private and the obscure and humble sailor who made victory possible. He is the eternally youthful spirit of government by the people. His jubilant antagonism overthrew the aged power of Prussia, and the joyful alacrity with which he went to battle overwhelmed the Empire which had staked its life on the ancient law of the jungle.

He fought with a great hope stirring in his heart. He was assured that he would battle in the war against war; that his steadfast service would help make the world of the future safe for democracy. He was promised that the overthrow of the divine right lord of war would make of mankind something better than cannon fodder and the world a better place in which to live and labor and love.

He relied upon those promises and scorned the muddled motives and subtle sophistries of those with sinister interests to serve. He gladly gave his life to prove his devotion to his holy cause, the highest and best cause the mind of man can conceive—the common good of the world. From falling hands he threw the torch to all who survived him, praying them with latest breath to hold it high as they took up his quarrel with the foe, the arch enemy of mankind—war.

Oh, yes; he and his cause and his deeds are known to America. If they be indeed unknown and unheeded by this Republic, his tomb, overlooking the Nation's Capital, with all its glitter and glamour, will be an intolerable tragedy, a statue of despair, a memorial to defeat and delusion, proclaiming to the world that the supreme opportunity of man proved greater than man. It will be a lighthouse with a lamp unlit, a perpetual reminder in the gathering gloom that a sacred obligation has been forgotten, a solemn promise to the dead passed from the memory of those for whom he died.

That faithlessness shall not come to pass. This Nation, under God, shall not forget this soldier and the cause for which he offered up his life. The tomb of this hero of faith, unknown no more but known to all mankind, gleaming with jeweled decorations of neighbor nations, shall be an imperishable reminder that out of his death and the death of his comrades in the Great War came the consecrated compact that rid the world of its most fearful foe, the scourge of war.

The unknown soldier. He is not unknown to the God of loving-kindness and compassion who said, "Greater love hath no man than that he lay down his life for his friends." His name must sparkle like the stars in the house of many mansions prepared for those who give up life and all that life holds dear for comrades and country and Christian progress. His great sacrifice must ring through heaven like a bell, proclaiming that though self-preservation is the first law of nature, self-surrender is the highest rule of godlike grace. He had the faith which oversweeps all fears and the works without which faith is dead. From his martyr blood sprang fruits of justice for the world and joy for every man and woman and little child. Inasmuch as he did it for the least of these, he did it for the Master of all.

He knew nothing, perhaps, of dogma, but he knew his duty and performed it to the uttermost. He may not have been familiar with creeds but he had courage in deadly dangers. He was not a student of doctrines but he was steadfast in devotion to his flag, the symbol of all the noble ideals he knew. He could not define sanctification, perhaps, but he could define service by living it in camp and field. He could not express his inner being in words, perhaps, but he could prove their nobility with his works. He could not orate lip praises of righteousness but he could give his life for it in a turbulent and terrible time.

Reverently we may feel sure that as he poured out his heart's blood wave on wave the pure gold of his nature was melted out and separated and the dross was cast away and consumed. Confidently we may believe that as he finished his course, having fought the good fight and kept the faith, even unto death, his outstretched, trembling hands somehow touched God's hand in the darkness and artless and unquestioning devotion answered to the touch. Surely at the last this soldier, faithful, awed by his own helplessness, in a sudden gleam of insight, knew and understood the immortal hope which lights the way from dark to Diety.

His body rests in Arlington, but he is known in the land where no mausoleums gleam among the everlasting hills. He is no nameless one languishing in obscurity, in the realm of the blest, where there is no pain of parting and where lips shall say "farewell" no more.

No. This is no unknown soldier, but one known to father and mother, to comrades, to country, and to God. His final resting place shall be a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night to guide America along the Golden Rule pathway to the promised land of enduring peace. His name shall sound like the call of a trumpet; the name of one who died that the world might live in peace—the Soldier of America.

SPEECH

HON. TOM CONNALLY,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, August 18, 1921.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, Viscount Bryce, lecturing at Williams College a few days ago, announced the principle that the greater the population in any republic or free government the more power was thrown into the hands of a relatively small number of men.

In the progress of the present revenue bill we have a striking illustration of the political truth enunciated by that eminent statesman. The Constitution of the United States prescribes that revenue legislation shall be originated by the House of Representatives, but in the present instance we find that in the House of Representatives, now composed of 300 Republican Members and 131 Democrats, those 300 Republican Members are absolutely impotent in the hands of the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means.

It is currently rumored about this Chamber that Republican Members of the House are anxious to vote against some schedules in this bill. And yet under the rule under which this bill is being considered Republican Members as well as Democratic Members are absolutely denied the right to vote, for instance, upon the question whether or not we shall strike from the bill the clause which removes the graduated surtaxes on incomes above $70,000. The steering committee and the Republican majority of the Ways and Means Committee are afraid to submit to the Republican Members of this House the single sharp-cut issue as to whether or not they will lift the taxes from great wealth and shift them to those less able to bear them. So we find that 300 Republican Members of the House really possess less power than when you had only a minority in this Chamber. You then had some voice in your party's policy.

I was amused a little while ago by the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. FESS. The gentleman declaimed loudly and fervidly in declaring that he desires to drive the great wealth of the country out of investing its income in tax-exempt securities.

The gentleman from Ohio is concerned because he is afraid that the great corporations of the country are going to invest their money in tax-exempt securities and not in the productive industries of the land. Why, does not the gentleman know that the possessors of large incomes who desired to buy tax-exempt securities have already bought them—have bought all they could get? If, according to his own statement, they invest every dollar of their income that is possible in tax-exempt securities, is it not probable that already they possess large amounts? But the theory of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is that after they have profiteered on the Liberty-bond holders of the country by buying their Liberty bonds below par in order to shirk their income taxes, after they have profited in that way they should then be relieved from paying surtaxes on what income they have not been able to invest in tax-exempt securities. The gentleman does not want them to buy State and county bonds. He does not want their money invested in schoolhouses. He does not want their money invested in good roads. He does not want the money of these great corporations invested in securities for public improvements. He wants them invested in more factories, when the warehouses now are full of manufactured goods that can not be sold, and when your tariff law is enacted still less of them will be sold abroad. I want to ask the gentleman what is to become of these tax-exempt securities if the rich people who own them sell them? Will not somebody else buy them? If they sell them, will they not still be tax-exempt? Will not the same amount of money be diverted from productive industries whether one man or a hundred own the tax-exempt securities?

Of course, the gentleman can not admit that the real purpose is to relieve the taxpayers with incomes in excess of $70,000. Some other reason must be advanced. His reason is that he does not want such investors to put their money in tax-exempt securities but in productive industries. His remedy for their plan of escaping part of their surtaxes by investing in tax-free bonds is to relieve them of all their surtax. I have examined with interest the report on the bill by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. It is a skillful production. It is better than you might expect from a gentleman who finds as much comfort as the gentleman from Michigan in standing on this floor and indulging in coarse ribaldry regarding a great scholar like President Wilson, and then turning from scholarship and culture finds satisfaction in laying tributes and flowers at the feet of a Senator from his own State whose reputation neither suggests tributes nor savors of flowers. The report is, indeed, a very fine production of classic fiction and unlogical logic. It first starts out by saying—

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill to reduce and equalize taxation—

I was at first puzzled on investigating this bill and report to find out just how those two propositions have been applied. It is true that the bill does reduce and equalize taxation, but the trouble about it is that it does neither in the same place where it does the other. It reduces taxation when it comes to those great corporations of the land which pay excess profits. It reduces taxation when it comes to those individuals who pay on incomes above $70,000, but it practically stops reducing when it leaves those two classes of taxpayers. But the question is, Where does it equalize? Why, it equalizes all of the soda-water merchants in the land. Regardless of whether a man's capital is $10 or $10,000,000, regardless of whether his sales are $100 or $100,000, he is equalized, and each and all are to pay $10. The bill must "equalize."

Mr. BOX. They are going to cut that out.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I understand they are going to cut it out, but they only cut it out after a barrage of telegrams over the Western Union and the Postal and messages by other methods of communication was dropped over on the Republican Members. They in turn put a box barrage around the Republican Ways and Means Committee, and practically every Member on the Republican side who is not on the Ways and Means Committee has been going around this House to-day with his pockets so full of yellow papers that they are sticking out of each pocket. [Laughter.] Bushels of telegrams from the people made them responsive, and everybody on that side except the members of the Ways and Means Committee said, "Look here, a heap more people in my district drink soda water than pay excess-profits taxes. That tax has got to come off." [Laughter.] Now, I want to tell those of you who have been getting those telegrams to-day that they are just an opener. Whenever the people find out the other things in this bill you are not only going to get telegrams but you are going to get private interviews when you go back home this summer for the recess which is to be taken in a few days. It has been rumored that nearly all Republican Members are anxious for the recess in order to go home. They said a week ago that they were going to hit the train out home at once. Since the debate opened up many say they have so many departmental matters they do not believe that they are going home. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] "You know that they have just reorganized the new Veterans' Bureau, and I am going to remain here and do something for the boys back home." [Laughter.]

But I must get along. Remember, the object of this bill is to reduce and equalize taxation. Reduce taxation where it is biggest and equalize it upward where it is the littlest. We find that the people of the United States, 100,000,000 human beings, have asked the Republican Party to lower the taxes, and they answer by lowering them—not on 100,000,000 human beings, but on about 2,000 sordid, hungry, grasping, greedy corporations that have earned their money during the war, and by leaving them on the backs of the human beings who are demanding that they shall be lifted from them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We find that the 100,000,000 people earning ordinary incomes of $1,500, $2,000, or $3,000 are appealing to the Republican Party—and they have to appeal to that party because it is in power—to lift the taxes from their backs, but instead of lifting the burden from them it lifts it from 10,437 individuals who paid in 1919 an income tax on an income in excess of $70,000. You leave unanswered the appeal of 100,000,000 of people, but you respond to the appeal of 10,437 individuals whose income was more than $70,000. Do they need any relief? Is business stagnation injuring them? Are they among the unemployed who, according to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS], are walking the streets to the number of 5,000,000? Will you by this bill bring any relief to the other 100,000,000? No; you are going to relieve the 10,000 that pay tax on an income of over $70,000 a year. They try to appease the individual with an income less than $5,000 by a small increase of his exemption, but the rate is not lowered.

Let me call your attention to the following table showing the effect of this bill on large individual incomes:

Effect of reductions of surtax on individual incomes as proposed in H. R. 8245.

Income.	Reduction.
72,000	60
74,000	120
76,000	200
78,000	300
80,000	420
82,000	560
84,000	720
86,000	900
88,000	1,100
90,000	1,320
92,000	1,560
94,000	1,820
96,000	2,100
98,000	2,400
100,000	2,720
200,000	24,720
300,000	52,720
500,000	114,720
1,000,000	274,720
1,500,000	439,720
2,000,000	604,720
5,000,000	1,594,720

Do not forget that persons who pay on an annual income from $5,000 to $70,000 get no reduction whatever, but when an income passes $70,000 the present tax is lowered. Ninety million dollars annually will be lost in revenue. Whatever is lost must be paid by the rest of those who pay taxes. The money must come from somewhere.

The committee says in this report that the bill is drawn for the purpose of reviving business. Now, what do we find? If you want to revive business, if you want to put new life in business that is almost in a state of paralysis, if you want to stimulate and start a quickening pulse into every artery and vein of the commercial body, what would you do? You would stimulate that portion where the circulation was the poorest, where business was the most stagnant, and depression the greatest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas five minutes more.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What do you do in this case? This bill removes the taxes from the great corporations that are prospering, the ones that are paying excess-profits tax, earning more than 8 or 9 or 20 per cent—you are removing the tax from them and helping their business, but the little fellows that are not making above 8 per cent are given an additional tax of 2½ per cent in order to improve their business. Why, my friends, can you improve business by taxing the man that is prospering least and taking the burden off the man that is prospering most, and yet that is what this bill does. It reduces the taxes on the concern that is making an inordinate profit and adds to the burdens of the concern that is making a small profit.

If this bill should become the law a corporation of only $50,000 capital and earning only 5 per cent will have its taxes increased 25 per cent over the present law, while another corporation of the same capital, but earning 20 per cent, would have its taxes reduced by $340. When it earns 25 per cent its taxes will fall from $2,490 to $1,312.50; when its income is 33⅓ per cent it will save $2,093.34 in taxes; and when its earnings reach 50 per cent the corporation will pay $4,285 less than under the present law. The result of some of the changes which this bill will effect is graphically set forth in the following tables:

Effect of the repeal of the excess-profits tax.

The new revenue bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representati ves contains a provision for the repeal of the present excess-profits tax on corporations and an increase in the normal tax from 10 to 12½ per cent.

The effect of this proposed law on those corporations whose invested capital is from $5,000 to $10,000,000, and who are earning from 5 per cent to 50 per cent thereon, is shown in the following exhibit. Those corporations whose capital and income are in the block between the heavy black lines will pa y more tax under the proposed law, while those to the right and below the second black line will pay less tax.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] has given exhaustive and analytical study to the operation of the excess-profits tax, and I desire to quote a portion of a telegram sent by him from his sick bed to his Democratic colleagues:

An analysis of the statistics contained in the detailed report as to corporation incomes and income and excess-profits taxes in the report of the commissioner for the calendar years 1917 and 1918, the 1918 report being the first and only one containing the details of corporate income and income and excess-profits taxes arranged in classes according to the amount of profits each made, shows that 180 corporations made annually from $5,000,000 up to $300,000,000 and over. The Steel Corporation made over $500,000,000 net profits in 1918 and had a net income of $2,554,000,000, and, while paying only $203,000,000 income tax, paid $848,000,000 excess-profits taxes, while the over 300,000 corporations making from nothing up to $100,000 net income yearly paid only $285,000,000 excess-profits taxes. One thousand and twenty-six corporations, with a net income of $4,255,000,000, more than one-half of the total corporate net income of all the 317,559 corporations, while paying only $333,000,000 income tax, paid $1,422,000,000 of excess-profits tax; that is, paid over one-half, or nearly two-thirds, of the entire excess-profits tax and $344,000,000 excess-profits tax more than the remaining 316,500 other corporations. At a glance one will see that the proposed proposition is one to relieve a few hundred of the biggest profiteering corporations in the United States, and not, as Mellon says, "to unclog business." It also shows the small amount of income tax paid in proportion to the excess-profits tax paid.

After the payment of excess-profits and other taxes, the amount of net income of corporations from 1917 to 1919 was as follows:

The records of the Internal Revenue Bureau show that corporations during the past five years have made net profits of $47,000,000,000. After payment of all Federal taxes a net profit of $38,000,000,000 remained. Four-fifths of such amount was made by less than 10,000 corporations and more than nineteen billions was made by about 1,000 corporations—such as the Steel Trust, Du Pont Powder Co., and other large concerns. Their profits were enormously increased by the war. While war brought hardship and suffering to the great mass of the people, to them it brought unprecedented prosperity.

Oh, but they say you are to repeal the excess-profits tax because the war is over. That is true in a way. The war is over, the shooting is over, the cannons have ceased to boom, and the boys have ceased to march. But the war is not over when it comes to discharging the obligations that we incurred; the war is not over when it comes to healing the wounds of those who are injured; the war is not over when it comes to supporting the widows and orphans and educating vocationally and otherwise the boys who were wounded in the war. Whatever might be the policy with reference to times of normalcy, whatever might be the peace-time policy with reference to the excess-profits tax, I for one believe that if it was justified by the war, I believe it is justified until the burdens of the war are measurably discharged. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The war is not over simply because the fighting has stopped. It has left on us a heavy burden that those people who made enormous sums during the war and because of the war ought to help discharge. When the command "cease firing" passed down the lines the crippled and the wounded were not thereby healed. The peace negotiations did not restore the health of the boy who was infected with tuberculosis as the aftermath of influenza. The armistice did not fill a single empty sleeve nor bring the light to a single blinded eye. To the widow whose husband died on a foreign field or the mother whose only son now sleeps in a foreign grave was not restored her loved one by the conclusion of a peace treaty; but marching on down the avenues of the future the burdens and obligations and duties imposed by war will go with us, and the great corporations that made untold fortunes because of the war ought to be kept on the roll call until the obligations are discharged.

I do not despise wealth. I am going to get honestly and fairly as much wealth as I can, and I blame no other man for accumulating wealth honestly. But I want to say to you that I hope I shall never get a dollar that is so holy, that is so sacred, that in my heart it may hope to have a place above the welfare of my country. [Applause.]

I trust that I shall never have a dollar that my country can not have in its time of need, wherever and whatever I may be. And I want to say one other thing to the Republican side of this House while we are talking about riches. You have made a great mistake in not incorporating in this measure an amendment to the inheritance tax fixing upon the great inheritances of this land an increased graduated tax. I believe in encouraging a man's industry in his lifetime. Let him accumulate a great fortune if he may, fairly and lawfully.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Let him accumulate all of the wealth that he can lawfully as a result of his enterprise and intelligence. During his lifetime let him have dominion over it, so long as he obeys the law. Even that involves tremendous power, because dominion over money means dominion over men in these times, it means power; but I do not believe that any man has the inalienable right to accumulate great wealth, millions upon millions, and transmit that wealth to his descendants to the exclusion of the right of his Government to call on him as a condition of his bequeathing it to his descendants to pay a share of that great income into the coffers of his country's Treasury. Why? The constitution of most, if not all, free governments in the world contain provisions against perpetuities. Away back in the common law they had to lay down prohibitions against perpetuities. Why? Because it is the tendency of men, through greed and ambition, to acquire all of the wealth and land that it is possible to acquire and then transmit them to the first born, and thence to the next first born, and on and on, until it was found that these great accumulations of wealth and lands when entailed were a menace to the public welfare, a menace to the safety of the State. So in this day of ours while we do not permit actual perpetuities, yet the transmission from generation to generation of great fortunes and the power that they confer may some day threaten the safety of the Republic.

You need not get excited: I am not talking socialism, but I am trying to prevent socialism. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I want to say that I would rather my Government would tax heavily some of these great fortunes in a legal, constitutional, and orderly way, whereby the whole people might receive the benefits of the partial dissipation of the fortune, rather than they should be wholly dissipated by the decree of a soviet. Great accumulations of wealth, with their accompanying power, unless restrained and controlled, become a menace to every form of government, and I believe this bill should have established the doctrine that we will require these great fortunes to pay a large share into the Public Treasury through a graduated tax. I would not tax the very small inheritances; I would provide a minimum exemption. For the moderate inheritance a small tax should be levied, and as the inheritance increases I should increase the graduated tax somewhat as the income and excess-profits taxes are increased.

We find that this bill relieves the corporations of the country of $450,000,000 in excess-profits taxes. We find it relieves the large income-tax powers of $90,000,000 of revenue; but what do they substitute? They substitute a flat tax on the small corporations of the country, and yet they tell you they are reducing taxation. They are putting an increased flat tax on the little electric-light plant in your town and the little flour mill in Kansas, on the little cotton gin in the South, and on the little irrigation plant in Idaho. They have put an increased tax on every corporation of small income and small means, and thereby they will add to the cost of living among the people and to all of the ordinary expenses of life. That is another instance where they equalize. It is true these corporations are not equal in income and it is true they are not equal in percentage earnings on capital stock, but when it comes to taxation we are going to equalize them by taxing them all by a flat 12½ per cent rate. And so by the fiat of this law you are going to both equalize the little fellow and reduce the big fellow, under pretense of reducing and equalizing taxation for the people of the United States.

SPEECH
OF
HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH, OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 20, 1921.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4075) to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman who preceded me, the chairman of our committee, Mr. JOHNSON, is at all times fair. I am satisfied that he did not intend, if he did state it, to say that the report which has been published and claimed to have been sent to the committee by Secretary Hughes was his report. I believe the Secretary himself never has read it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I did not assume, although the Secretary sent this report to the heads of his department, that he had by so doing adopted it as his own. The Secretary has signed the letter and has sent for a full copy from which the paraphrase was made.

Mr. SABATH. That being the case, I have nothing to say. I was under the impression that the Secretary had not read the report but merely submitted it as a matter of course, and that the report had been written by some clerk somewhere in the department.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the bill before us is entitled "A bill to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States." To my mind it should bear the title "A bill to prevent the reunion and force the separation of families and to discourage and retard American industry and national progress."

The advocates of this measure indirectly endeavor to create an impression that the country is in danger of being flooded by millions of undesirable immigrants. Therefore, I feel it my duty to call to the attention of the House and the country the fact that such is not the case. Instead of millions only a limited number of immigrants are entering or are permitted to enter our country under the present immigration laws and passport regulations now in force. As I stated before, when speaking against the adoption of a special rule, I am of opinion that the demands for legislation of this kind are unjustifiable and unwarranted. I can not help but believe that if the Members and the country were familiar with the present immigration laws, they would not be in favor of this action. The present laws prevent the entry of undesirable immigrants, and let me here state to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] and to the House that I hope that between the time of general debate and the time of the vote on this bill the Members will familiarize themselves at least with section 3 of the present immigration act. If they will read the provisions of the present law they will be satisfied that it amply protects this country from the coming of any undesirable aliens.

Mr. Chairman, believing that it may not be convenient for the members to secure the immigration act, I will insert a portion of section 3 as part of my remarks:

SEC. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority; persons with chronic alcoholism; paupers; professional beggars; vagrants; persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who practice polygamy or believe in or advocate the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; prostitutes, or persons coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who directly or indirectly procure or attempt to procure or import prostitutes or persons for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who are supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution; persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced, assisted, encouraged, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, whether such offers or promises are true or false, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; persons who have come in consequence of advertisements for laborers printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country; persons likely to become a public charge.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman means that if the present law is enforced.

Mr. SABATH. Yes, and I am of the opinion that if the present law be properly enforced there could be no objections on the part of anyone to the immigration possible of coming to the United States. When I say that, I mean if the Congress would appropriate a large enough sum of money to enable the officials to properly and efficiently administer and enforce the law. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that during the consideration and preparation of the act of 1917 every care was taken to make impossible the entry into the United States of any undesirable aliens. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] inquired as to the passport regulations, and whether the bill should not be amended to enable our representatives to examine and refuse visés to undesirables. I would say to him and to the House that it is being done and many of the applicants who have passports are refused visés by our representatives abroad.

As to the fear entertained by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] and others as to the great influx, I wish to say that the same fear has been earnestly entertained by other gentlemen, and particularly by the former chairman of the Immigration Committee, the late Mr. Burnett. Three years ago, two years ago, one year ago, charges were being made that unless immigration be immediately suspended this country would be flooded, and only last year statements were made on the floor of the House that we must expect at least from two to three million aliens would enter our country and that within two or three years perhaps 15,000,000 would come unless a bill to suspend immigration be immediately enacted.

Time has elapsed, and even since the bill was considered by this House three or four months ago the facts show that there is no evidence anywhere that a tremendous influx is threatening the United States. I have the figures which I shall submit to the House as to the actual number that arrived in the United States for the year ending March 31. From April 1, 1920, to March 31, 1921, instead of there being millions, as was charged would come, only 600,000 came, and 230,000 departed. In the year 1918 only 110,000 arrived; in 1919, 141,000; in 1920 only 430,000, and there departed in 1918, 44,000; in 1919, 123,000; and in 1920, 288,000. So that the entire number that came over and above the number that departed for the year 1918 was 18,000; for 1919, 20,000; and for the fiscal year 1921 only 193,000.

These figures disprove the charges made by the advocates of this legislation last December, as well as before that time. The majority of those that have come in since the war have been women and children coming to join their husbands and their parents. This bill, if enacted into law, will, in many cases, prevent a wife from joining her husband, children from joining their parents, and parents from joining their children, and all under the flimsy pretext given heretofore.

If this bill becomes a law the number of persons who can come to the United States under its provisions are as follows:

Belgium	1,482
Denmark	5,449
France	3,523
Germany	75,040
Netherlands	3,624
Norway	12,116
Sweden	19,956

Spain	663
Turkey in Europe	967
Turkey in Asia	1,792
Total outside northwestern Europe	153,249
Northwestern Europe	202,212
Grand total	355,461

Mr. Chairman, under the census of 1920 the statistics show that we have in the United States a total foreign population of 13,703,987. These figures, however, include foreign-born aliens from Canada, Newfoundland, Cuba, other West Indies, Mexico, Central and South America, and the Atlantic and Pacific islands, countries to which the 3 per cent limit does not apply. The total born in those countries, in accordance with the census of 1920, is 1,809,213, leaving a total of foreign born of countries to which this bill applies of 11,899,744, and 3 per cent of that number would permit the entry of 356,843, or only 1,382 above the census of 1910. Calculations based on this latest census will afford a fair and proper division of immigration from those countries which have secured their independence during the World War and also of those where boundary and political changes have taken place. Only by the adoption of the 1920 census as a basis of calculation will we have accurate and positive information as to what immigration will be permitted from any given country, and for the information of the House and the people in general I insert figures which I have tabulated in accordance with such census, which I believe to be as nearly correct as possible:

[1] Excepted.

Mr. Chairman, the majority of the committee in its support has given six main reasons for the adoption of this bill, and I hope I shall have the time to answer each and every one of them. The first reason given is, the large unemployment that exists in the United States. In connection with that statement I wish that the gentlemen would read the statement made by a gentleman representing the various railroad employees of the United States, Mr. Lauck, which appeared in the papers this morning, the statement having been made in Chicago yesterday. He is the economist for the railroad employees and he clearly states the reason for unemployment. Under the leave granted me by the House I insert a portion of the statement made by Mr. Lauck and also a statement made by Mr. Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation, on the same subject:

The evidence shows there is a capital combine, consisting of the major banks, the railroads and the industries controlling basic materials, and that this combine has and exercises a power over the economic destiny of the United States. It shows that within the identical capitalist group lies the power to adjust or misadjust relative prices in a manner that will stimulate or suppress industrial activity. It points out that this focal capitalist group has deliberately maintained high prices of steel, coal, cement and other basic materials, and that the railroads financed by the same interests have refused to place the orders for plant maintenance, or even the orders necessary to prevent plant and equipment deterioration.

The exhibit shows that the greater factors in American industry—the railway equipment producers, the railway repair works, the steel interests, the coal, cement, and other basic material producers—all are closely bound together by intercapital relations and interlocking directorates, coming to focus in the house of Morgan.

The railway employees make no issue as to the propriety of a centralized system of economic control. The point of the exhibit is its challenge of the unconscionable misuse which the great combine has made of its power. The employees call attention to the national responsibility which the possession of such power entails and note that this responsibility in the case of the railway industry has been recognized and written into the Federal laws of the United States, and the employees specifically point out that this responsibility is being unscrupulously evaded.

ROADS PLEAD POVERTY.

The railroads are pleading poverty. The banks are making unprecedented profits and declaring unprecedented dividends, and the same applies to steel, coal, railway equipment, and similarly situated concerns. The capital combine, in preparing to precipitate unemployment, adopted the policy that the railroads "should do it first." Railway improvement programs were deferred; railway maintenance was reduced below minimum legal requirement.

The report brings into clear relief the fact that there is no foundation for opinion which the employers' publicity machinery would popularize that the railways and the other great industries are the victims of some misfortune of the times.

The industrial paralysis, which has staggered America, is "capital on strike against society." And capital, nationally and internationally organized and concentrated, takes the stand that the "capital strike" shall go on until labor comes to its knees and consents to sweeping reductions of wages, and also consents to surrender its right to bargain collectively on a scale coextensive with the organization of the employers.

In a recent number of the American Federationist, Mr. Gompers, the veteran head of the American Federation of Labor, says:

The world needs production. The employers have been saying so for months. They began with the armistice and continued until a few days ago. Now they have stopped saying so.

The reason is not that the world's needs have been satisfied. The reason is twofold: Inflation is coming out of the business structure, and in the process employers see what they believe to be an opportunity to cut wages, though there has been no inflation in wages; secondly, the more unscrupulous employers believe that by laying off workmen with an announcement of curtailment necessities, the same or other workmen can be hired within a brief time at a sufficient wage reduction to make the temporary reduction justifiable from a profit point of view.

I made the statement on the floor of the House last year that the reason for the unemployment was not due to the immigrants who came here, who are mainly women and children, but that it is due to a conspiracy on the part of special interests who are trying to destroy organized labor and trying to beat down the wages of the American laboring man, suspending operations, and dismissing men so that they could rehire them a few weeks or a few months later at a reduced wage. Mr. Lauck's and Mr. Gompers' statements bear out the charges I made then and that I reiterate now on the question of unemployment.

The next reason assigned by the committee for restricting immigration is the lack of housing facilities in the United States. These conditions do not exist any more to-day, and as has been properly stated, if we could have common labor so that building could again proceed, and if the special interests were compelled to cut down the high prices of building material there would be no housing question in the United States. Here again I shall insert some information on that question. I also insert extracts from the report of National Federation of Construction Industries issued December 4, 1920:

* * * It is not the intention of the National Federation of Construction Industries to seek to ascribe to the American Federation of Labor a motive which causes it to attempt to stop immigration into this country. It is rather our desire to point out the effect which must result from the stoppage of immigration, and to call the attention of business men in all branches of the industry to the reasons why such legislation should meet with our strongest opposition.

The United States offers such advantages to the well-intentioned immigrant that, even though he comes to our shores as an unskilled workman, he is enabled with application to advance himself within a comparatively few years to a position above that of unskilled labor. The result of this exceptional opportunity which the immigrant finds in this country is that, if immigration is stopped even temporarily, there develops an acute shortage of unskilled labor. The tools of production are more abundant in the United States than in any other country; and the condition of unskilled labor is proportionately better. But even with our advanced facilities for production, unskilled labor is a vital necessity; and without it industry must stop.

* * * * * * *

It should be said at this point that the immigration committee of the National Federation of Construction Industries is now at work upon proposed legislation which will embody the points referred to in the above quotations, and in addition thereto upon legislation first, to provide for the training of immigrants in the elements of American citizenship and in those fundamentals of general education to which an American citizen is entitled, and second, to provide an information service looking toward the geographical distribution of immigrants in such a manner as will best comport with their own interests and with the employment requirements throughout the country.

The Associated General Contractors of America, which has a strong immigration committee, has worked in close cooperation with the National Federation of Construction Industries for some time on this subject.

It is suggested that other construction associations should immediately appoint immigration committees if they have not done so, and that they cooperate with the immigration committee of the National Federation of Construction Industries in order to obtain the most vigorous action possible throughout the industry. The business men of the United States will need to exert themselves actively, both individually and as associations, if the disaster to the country arising from the stoppage of immigration is to be averted.

* * * * * * *

The argument may be made in some quarters that we are on the verge of a period of unemployment, and that to permit immigration would increase the condition of unemployment. In this connection it should be remembered that our present national supply of labor is only slightly in excess of the demand. It is generally conceded that the present condition of business inactivity will be of brief duration. With the return of business to a normal volume, the shortage of labor and the accompanying lowering of individual production would result, as in the recent past, to obtain higher price levels of commodities in general. This condition can be averted only by additional supplies of labor furnished through immigration.

JOHN R. WIGGINS,
Chairman, Immigration Committee.
JOHN L. CLARKSON,
General Secretary.

NATIONAL IMMIGRATION COUNCIL,
EASTERN HEADQUARTERS,
15 Whitehall Street, New York, April 21, 1921.

Re: How to make our American marine self-sustaining.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The National Immigration Council, composed of representative consulting, civil, mechanical, and mining engineers, architects and naval architects of the United States, is strongly in favor of a constructively liberal immigration policy.

It would, in the opinion of this organization, be illogical and inefficient to enact a law restricting immigration to a certain percentage of the various alien races resident in the United States, as established by the 1910 census.

The National Immigration Council strongly urges upon you to defeat the so-called 3 per cent legislation and to insist upon constructive legislation—which the Senate bill is not—to admit desirable immigrants from whatever European country we may be able to get them, and to provide salvation of our merchant marine by enacting into a Federal law that for every alien brought here in an American steamship one alien may be brought over in a foreign-flag steamship, giving preference to the alien who comes over on the American ship.

Yours, very truly,

NATIONAL IMMIGRATION COUNCIL,
F. C. HARLEY,
Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, the next reason given is the presence in the United States of the 10,000 or more unnaturalized aliens. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] and the committee ought to know that it is not the fault of these immigrants that they are not naturalized. The great majority of them are trying to the best of their ability to become naturalized. In the cities of Chicago, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and in every other city in the United States we have thousands upon thousands who have been waiting for months and years, who have been thoroughly investigated by the Department of Justice and examined by the Naturalization Bureau in respect to their fitness, but they have been unable in a majority of the cases to secure their naturalization because of the fact that we have not enough clerks for that purpose in these bureaus, and in other cases because we have not enough judges to hear the cases of these applicants. Notwithstanding the fact, however, that some of them have not been naturalized, over 400,000 of those who were unnaturalized waived exemptions during the war and volunteered their services when this country needed them. You can not point out a single case where any one of these aliens has been convicted during the war of treason or disloyalty to America.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. CABLE. The gentleman referred to 10,000 unnaturalized aliens in the United States.

Mr. SABATH. I meant 10,000,000.

Mr. CABLE. That is why I asked the question. I wanted to know if the gentleman did not mean 10,000,000.

Mr. SABATH. That is what I meant. I regret if I said 10,000. The 10,000,000 include all of the aliens in the United States, which also includes women and children, and many men and women, the parents of American citizens, who can not, on account of the strict naturalization laws, pass all of the requirements. Furthermore, all these people have large families and are not guilty, as are many Americans, of race suicide, but I do know that all that can qualify are only too anxious to become American citizens. Within the last six months I received at least 500 requests and appeals from those who have clamored for opportunity to become citizens, who have been waiting for months and years for that happy moment.

During my last visit to Chicago I made a personal investigation as to the delays in naturalization, and as a result I made a special appeal to the judges of our courts having jurisdiction in such cases to hear the thousands of pending cases. Those judges whom I could not see personally I communicated with by letter, and am pleased to say have received favorable replies from all of them to the effect that more judges will be assigned to these cases, and that those now handling them will give more time to the hearing of additional cases.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I will yield.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to ask the gentleman, who is well acquainted with the bill, I know, on page 3, amendment 10, it is proposed to insert the language set out in italics, I take it, that—aliens who prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, etc.—

may be admitted. Did the gentleman have in mind any particular class or sect or religious persuasion when this amendment was drawn?

Mr. SABATH. No. I will try to explain to the gentleman that originally the amendment that I introduced—not being able to offer the amendment myself, not being as yet elected a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I offered it through the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL]—was an amendment to exempt from the 3 per cent limit not only those who are fleeing from religious but also from political oppression and persecution. I had no one nationality or race of people in mind. I believe, whether it be the Jews from Russia or Rumania or Christians from Armenia, or any other people fleeing from oppression and persecution, or the Irish patriots who are seeking here a haven of refuge from political oppression, they should be received as heretofore by this, up to now, liberty and freedom loving America.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Let me ask further. I know the gentleman is advised, and that is why I am asking him. Are there laws in Poland and Russia that discriminate against the Jewish people because of their religious faith?

Mr. SABATH. No; there are not. I am pleased to say to the gentleman that the contrary is true. Since Poland has secured its independence not only it but also the other new countries have adopted a constitution and laws which provide and pledge equal treatment to all.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Now, there are at present thousands of people waiting at Warsaw, as I know from communications that have come to my district. Could these people who are now waiting at Warsaw in such large numbers make application under this exemption clause and be admitted to the United States, in the judgment of the gentleman?

Mr. SABATH. I do not think so because under that exemption, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, they will have to prove beyond any doubt to the Secretary of Labor that they are fleeing from religious persecution and oppression.

Mr. SIEGEL. If the gentleman will permit, the Department of Labor this morning informed me that in 18 months under practically the same language we have in section 3 of the present immigration act just 14 people have been able to prove that to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor, and who were permitted to enter.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That answers the question.

Mr. SABATH. How much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. MASON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. MASON. Does this bill provide now for the protection of those fleeing from political persecution?

Mr. SABATH. I am sorry to say that the amendment which I offered in committee was not adopted, but I intend to offer it on the floor of the House, and trust that the House will accept it.

Mr. MASON. But the bill as at present drawn does not?

Mr. SABATH. It does not.

Mr. Chairman, the fifth reason assigned by the committee in its report is the fear of the danger of spreading contagious and loathsome diseases. That bugaboo was started a few days before we considered the last immigration bill in order to influence the membership of this House, and because the health commissioner of New York desired to secure an additional $200,000 appropriation. The chairman and the committee must admit that the many vessels which they claimed were bringing in thousands suffering from typhus and other diseases never arrived. The few cases found aboard two of the ships have been efficiently treated and nothing further has been heard, even from the overzealous health commissioner, since.

The sixth reason advanced by the committee points out the inadvisability of admitting aliens of nationalities speaking various languages. This reason must have been given to the chairman by the overzealous gentlemen who are trying to secure greater appropriations for the so-called Americanization plan, who believe that people can not be good citizens unless they are perfect English linguists. Mr. Chairman, it does not signify that people who are not familiar with the English language are not good citizens, and the charge that they can not read the English language and therefore are ignorant of our Constitution and our laws, is incorrect. Under the present immigration law and the provisions of the literacy test very few illiterates can enter the United States, and though they may not be able to read the English language, they can read the language of their native country. We have in this country many newspapers and periodicals that are published in the various languages, and, contrary to the charges which have been made, are loyal and educate the people as to the duties and obligations they owe to this country. I am pleased to say that during the war, excepting only about 2 per cent, these foreign language newspapers cooperated in every way with the Government and in the strongest possible terms preached loyalty and patriotism. They devoted pages to Liberty loan drives, aiding tremendously the various communities to reach their quota; and they stimulated sentiment for increased production in our mines, mills, shops, plants, in fact, in every line of work.

Mr. Chairman, this bill, being similar to the one passed by the Sixty-sixth Congress, and being opposed to discrimination in any legislation, I took the liberty at that time to call President Wilson's attention to some of the unfair provisions of the bill, and as this bill contains the same objectionable features I will insert a copy of the communication which I addressed to the President, feeling confident that when the inconsistencies of the measure were pointed out to him he would refuse to sign the bill:

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Permit me to call your attention to some of the iniquitous and discriminatory provisions of the immigration bill as passed.

In the first place, contrary to all former policies, the bill takes from the Commissioner of Immigration and the Secretary of Labor all discretionary power. Originally the House bill as well as the Senate bill provided that the Secretary of Labor may in individual cases admit aliens in excess of the maximum number (3 per cent) when in his opinion such action is justifiable as a measure of humanity.

The bill embodies the so-called percentage principle, providing that the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted to the United States in any fiscal year shall be limited to 3 per cent of the number of persons of such nationality resident in the United States, as determined by the United States census of 1910, and makes exceptions to Government officials, tourists, travelers, and those who are in transit through the United States. It provides that the nationality shall be determined by country of birth and authorizes the Secretaries of State, Commerce, and Labor to prepare statements showing the number of persons of the various nationalities resident in the United States as determined by the census of 1910, with the following provision:

"But whenever such population basis is not applicable by reason of changes in political boundaries occurring subsequent to 1910 and resulting in the creation of new countries, the governments of which are recognized by the United States or otherwise in the transference of territory of one country to another, such transference being officially recognized by the United States, then the said officials, jointly, shall estimate the number of persons resident in the United States in 1910, who were born within the area now included in such new and other countries."

Inasmuch as the census of 1910 recorded all of the peoples of Austria-Hungary as Austrians and Hungarians, and those in Alsace-Lorraine as Germans, it will be impossible for the commissions to allocate the just proportions to these various nationalities and, in addition, as our country has not recognized Lithuania, Ukrania, Latvia, and Esthonia, persons of those countries can not possibly be admitted. Not only that, but due to the fact that the war-time regulation passport measure as passed is being made permanent, it will make it impossible for any political refugees or any peoples fleeing from religious persecution to be admitted. I am satisfied that in all such cases passports will be denied them by their own Governments.

Notwithstanding that an attempt will be made to inform the people of the various nationalities when the quota has been reached, I am satisfied in view of the fact that no penalty is provided for the steamship companies bringing in aliens in excess of the stated number, in their great anxiety to reach this country, thousands will come in above the prescribed limit who will be denied admission and, consequently, will suffer untold hardships, suffering, and financial losses that they can not bear.

I refrain from giving the many valid reasons against this unconsidered new departure from our long-established traditional policy, but only take the privilege to point out the provisions which appear to me to be the most discriminatory and which will be impossible of enforcement with any degree of equality, and which discriminate against peoples who have proven themselves to be the most desirable and who have proven their patriotism and loyalty to our country in its hour of greatest need.

I therefore most respectfully ask that you give this bill that thoughtful and humane consideration that you have given to all matters during all of the time that you have served the Nation.

Due to the prejudice created by the Members and restrictionists against the alien and anything foreign, I feel that the veto of this bill would be overridden and the only way this undemocratic and un-American legislation can be prevented is by your withholding any action thereon

With assurance of respect and esteem, believe me,

Sincerely yours,

A. J. SABATH.

His Excellency, the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Chairman, time does not permit me to speak in general on the question of immigration and I therefore, under leave of the House, insert in my remarks a brief extract from the first speech which I made on the floor of this House in the Sixtieth Congress, on the subject of immigration. This was 14 years ago and at that time I deemed it my duty to answer the unwarranted attacks made against the immigrant of that day:

[From the Congressional Record (House), p. 881, Jan. 20, 1908.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I think I may justly claim for Chicago, my home, that it is one of the greatest if not the greatest city of the world. It is a city that is recognized as one of the wonders of the age, and I want to say to you that no man with a desire to be fair would deny to the foreign-born citizens of Chicago their just share in the making of the city's greatness. [Applause.] The foreigners of Chicago did much toward building the city. To a very large degree they helped to make the city what it is, and they are to-day doing their full share in maintaining the city at its high level. Chicago, without its foreign element would have no place among the cities of the earth.

Mr. Chairman, what these foreigners have done for Chicago they have done for the West and Northwest generally. Go out along our railroads, which extend, as the very arteries of our national life, into the great granaries of the West and Northwest, and you will find there, working everywhere, building railroads, working in the forests and on the farms, and in the mines and factories, engaged in every kind of enterprise and industry that helps to develop and increase the great wealth of our country, those very foreigners to whom these gentlemen have referred as undesirable citizens. And I wish to say here that one of the most important and significant features of the great work that is being done by these foreigners is that a large per cent of it is so hard and so toilsome that the average American workman would not be content to do it. Practically all the hardest and most wearisome, yet withal the most constructive and valuable work that is being done in America to-day, is being done by these foreigners to whom the gentlemen refer as undesirable citizens. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is not only unjust to speak of these people in this way, but that it does an honest and worthy class of citizens a great wrong. [Applause.]

Nearly every day, Mr. Chairman, we read in the newspapers that there has been a terrible mine accident somewhere or that there has been a frightful explosion in one of our mills or factories. And always, with these accounts, there is a statement that most of the workmen killed were foreigners. I will venture to say that an overwhelming per cent of the workmen who are killed annually in American mines and factories are foreigners. Thus do these undesirable citizens of whom these gentlemen speak sacrifice their very lives that America may rank at the head of industrial nations.

The statement has been made by the gentleman that the foreigner is forcing wages down in this country, and this I emphatically deny. It is a well-known economic principle that demand increases with production, and when the foreigner, by his labor, increases the American product, he raises rather than lowers not only his own condition, but that of the American laborer as well. This is why the West has been developed from a waste of prairie into the richest and most productive region in the world. The story of increased labor everywhere is the story of increased labor that preceded it.

Mr. Chairman, the arguments in favor of this bill and the charges that are being made were made over 100 years ago. The restrictionists of those days classed the people coming to this country then as undesirable and favored their exclusion. The same arguments were made as to the tendency of the immigrants to congest in the cities, and it was maintained that the effect of immigration was to reduce wages and lower the standard of living.

The report of the Immigration Commission quotes the following from Nile's Register of 1817:

"The immigrant should press into the interior. In the present state of the times we seem too thick on the maritime frontier already."

Consider that statement carefully, gentlemen, for you must remember that it was made when the immigration did not reach 5,000 a year.

Again, in the second annual report of the managers of the Society for the Prevention of Pauperism in New York City, 1819, we find the following:

"As to the emigrants from foreign countries, the managers are compelled to speak of them in the language of astonishment and apprehension. Through this inlet pauperism threatens us with the most overwhelming consequences."

In the year following this report only 8,385 immigrants came to this country, and yet we find these men speaking of this immigration in language of "astonishment and apprehension."

It would seem, as years went by, that no difficulty had been experienced in the assimilation of these immigrants that had been the cause of such great apprehension, and therefore they were immediately classed as "desirables," whereas those seeking admission a few years later were still regarded as a menace. In a paper entitled "Imminent dangers to the institutions of the United States of America through foreign immigration," and so forth, published in 1835, the author compares the immigration of earlier years with that of his day, and says:

"Then we were few, feeble, and scattered. Now we are numerous, strong, and concentrated. Then our accessions of immigration were real accessions of strength from the ranks of the learned and of the good, from enlightened mechanic and artisan and intelligent husbandman. Now immigration is the accession of weakness, from the ignorant victims of the priest-ridden slaves of Ireland and Germany or the outcast tenants of the poorhouses and prisons of Europe."

Remember these are the sentiments expressed in the year 1835, when there were less than 50,000 people admitted.

At a meeting of the delegates of the Native American National Convention, held in Philadelphia on July 4, 1845, an address was delivered in which occurred the following statement:

"It is an incontrovertible truth that the civil institutions of the United States of America have been seriously affected, and that they now stand in imminent peril from the rapid and enormous increase in the body of residents of foreign birth imbued with foreign feelings and of an ignorant and immoral character.

"The almshouses of Europe are emptied upon our coast, and this by our own invitation, not casually or to a trivial extent, but systematically and upon a constantly increasing scale."

In 1845, the year this address was delivered, some 114,000 immigrants came to make this country their future home.

All of the quotations I have used refer to a class of immigrants which to-day even the most rabid restrictionists refer to as "desirable."

Mr. Chairman, has it occurred to the membership of this House that the bill, without the provisions excepting from the 3 per cent limitation even the nearest relatives, will work the greatest injustice to those boys who volunteered during the late war? I speak of those boys who were not citizens of the United States—of those boys who waived their alien citizenship—of those boys who responded to the call of liberty and freedom and fought side by side with boys of American birth. I call the attention of the House to the feeling and sentiment that swept the country at that time and in the expressed voice and act of this very body when, in consideration of the loyalty and patriotism of these aliens, an act was passed waiving the naturalization law in their favor and permitting them to become citizens of these United States, providing they had resided in this country for the period of one year. The Bureau of Naturalization, under the operation of this law, naturalized 256,272 soldier aliens while such aliens were serving in our armed forces and since their discharge from the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. I ask this House whether it is right, whether this proposed legislation to deny admission to the blood relatives of these brave men, is in return for the valiant services rendered by the alien soldier? I again contend that this legislation has been considered in haste, that the committees of the House and Senate have acted upon the statements and assertions of restriction propagandists without consideration of full facts. Surely an exception, in the spirit of fair play and in appreciation of the splendid and valorous services of these foreign-born soldiers, could have been made in favor of their immediate kinsfolk. It is not too late for this House to assert itself and to prove to these foreign-born soldiers that the beacon light of liberty of this country beckons and welcomes those who wish to join them. From my own city, Chicago, I have received appeals from these boys, asking that I help to facilitate the issuance of a visa for a mother, brother, or sister. Is it the sense of this Congress to deny the bringing together of the families of these heroes who served our country in its hour of greatest need? At the proper time I shall propose an amendment, excepting the immediate families of discharged naturalized soldiers and naturalized soldiers now serving in our Army, Navy, and Marine Corps from the operation of the act. I trust this House, which should be the responsive throb to that which is just and right in the government of our country, will realize and appreciate the debt we owe the foreign-born soldier and adopt the proposed amendment without a dissenting vote.

Mr. Chairman, the advocates and proponents of this bill insist and persist that this is a temporary emergency measure. If I could bring myself to the belief that such will be the case I would not raise the objections which I have and would not try to bring about the adoption of amendments which I have suggested to the committee and insisted upon being embodied in the bill, and would not waste my time in endeavoring to humanize the bill. But, Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that I can not help but believe that under the pretext of temporary emergency legislation the committee is endeavoring to foist upon the Nation a permanent immigration restriction law upon a percentage basis which received very little consideration and study, and which is intended to be a clever method of discrimination against nationalities and peoples now designated as the new immigration which, for the last score years, has been charged as not being of a class of the older immigration. However, I feel that I have clearly shown in my former statements and remarks to any unbiased mind the falsity of these charges. Notwithstanding the fact that these advocates have no personal knowledge and make no effort to familiarize themselves whether these charges are true or not, they rehash for convenience sake charges made by prejudiced professional restrictionists in order to prejudice the minds of the American people not only as to the new but any and all immigration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, who demands this legislation? Did either of the two parties call for it in their platforms? Did President Harding ask for this legislation? Has any State or municipality petitioned Congress for it? I do not know of any. Of course, I am aware that there are some associations which have been organized for upward of 70 years, under various names, who have continuously clamored for the closing of our doors to immigration and for no other reasons than those that have been given by certain labor organizations. Up to a few years ago even the so-called grangers and farmers' organizations were fearful of immigration, but no one will contend that these organizations have come forward at this time in favor of the proposed bill. The committee had many gentlemen appear, representing agricultural and farmers' organizations, not only from the Western States but from many of the Southern States, pleading for relief and suspension of the literacy test to permit the temporary admission of common labor to aid them in harvesting their crops. Therefore we can not but believe that the demand for this legislation has been artificially created by the professional and zealous representatives of the anti-immigration league and those that are mislead by their prejudicial propaganda.

Mr. Chairman, who are the gentlemen that are leading the fight for this measure? What States and localities do they represent? Though we hear each and every one speak of the deplorable conditions in New York and other cities who are thousands of miles removed from those cities, and some who never have visited that great city of New York or other large centers, we still continue to hear them deplore the conditions that exist there. Of course, in that I do not wish to include the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], the chairman of the Committee, because I believe he has visited that city as well as the gentlemen from California and the gentleman from Colorado. But the other gentlemen from California, Washington, Texas, and Mississippi leading the fight for this legislation surely are not authorized or requested by the Representatives of the great cities of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Baltimore, Boston, and Buffalo to speak for them. I doubt very much whether you have heard a single one of the representatives coming from these leading cities, during the debate or consideration of this bill, requesting or demanding the enactment of this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, from the facts which I have presented to the House and the careful study which I have given to the immigration question, I feel justified to again charge that the demand for this legislation does not come from the majority of the American people nor from sections of the country familiar with the foreign-born people, but comes from well organized restriction societies and organizations.

Farm Statistics of Leading Counties.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. W. W. GRIEST,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 23, 1921.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Speaker, after the census of 1910 was completed I had the privilege, while addressing the House on the Agricultural appropriation bill, of placing in the RECORD a compilation of official statistics which showed that the 12 leading agricultural counties in the United States were as follows, ranking in the order named:

Lancaster County, Pa.; Los Angeles County, Calif.; McLean County, Ill.; Champaign County, Ill.; Livingston County, Ill.; La Salle County, Ill.; Fresno County, Calif.; Cook County, Ill.; Vermilion County, Ill.; Sangamon County, Ill.; Whitman County, Wash.; Aroostook County, Me.

National interest was evoked by this presentation. Since the completion of the 1920 census inquiries have come from various parts of the country as to the identity now of the leading agricultural counties and their relative rank. These inquiries are from widely separated parts of the country, and particularly from Lancaster County, Pa., which for a full half century has maintained agricultural premiership among all the counties of the Union. After exhaustive research I am enabled to fully set forth the information asked for in the tabulation herewith made a part of these remarks:

Agricultural statistics of the 10 leading counties in the United States.

Counties.	Total land area.	All land in farms.	Value of farm property.	Value of crops.	Value of live-stock products.	Value of animals sold or slaughtered.	Aggregate value of farm products.	Value of products per acre.	Rank.
San Bernardino, Calif.	12,900,480	415,738	99,648,710	26,681,925	1,324,443	391,540	28,397,908	68.31	3
San Joaquin, Calif.	926,720	706,308	140,600,079	39,748,032	3,099,576	1,482,206	44,329,814	62.76	5
McLean, Ill.	726,240	714,400	267,332,051	26,887,618	2,186,278	5,892,034	34,965,930	48.94	6
Champaign, Ill.	667,520	604,827	233,673,411	23,688,925	1,782,850	2,354,726	27,826,501	46.07	7

That the counties named in this table are justly entitled to the rank accorded them is readily recognizable by a scrutiny of the table, it being compiled from official sources.

By reading this table it will be seen that every tillable acre in Lancaster County, first in the table, produces $86.78 worth of farm products, whereas Los Angeles County, second in the table, and with over 330,000 more cultivated acres than Lancaster County, shows $83.13 per acre. San Bernardino County, Calif., with less farm acreage than Lancaster County and with about $20,000,000 less aggregate value of farm products than Lancaster, produces $68.31 per acre; while Aroostook County, Me., with nearly 300,000 more acres in farms than Lancaster, and whose main agricultural basis was a bumper crop of potatoes, is fourth with $65.27 per acre, $21 less per acre than Lancaster. And so it reads all the way down the table until we come to Tulare County, Calif., and Whitman County, Wash., each with more than 1,000,000 acres of farm land but whose fertility and farm productivity are of so much lower standard than that of Lancaster that they can only show, respectively, $36.55 and $26.70 as the total amount of farm products per acre.

There can be no question that these figures are indisputable and that this method of rating agricultural counties so as to show both their fertility and productivity is entirely proper. Of course, the fact that Lancaster County has held the distinction of being the banner agricultural county in the country for a half century has made the competition for first honors unusually keen, and the partisans of the other 10 counties could and have claimed various ways of computing the statistics in order to put their county first. For instance, Aroostook County, Me., with a total area of 4,129,920 acres, contends that its great extent warrants its ranking above Lancaster County, with an area of only 602,240 acres. Then, again, partisans of Tulare County, Calif., and Whitman County, Wash., each with more than 1,000,000 acres in farms, urge supremacy over Lancaster County, whose land in farms is reported at 554,776 acres. That the value of farm property in McLean County, Ill., is almost $270,000,000 and in Los Angeles County, Calif., almost $400,000,000 naturally brings to the front also claims from these counties that they far outrank Lancaster County, whose farm property is reported at a value of $119,842,187.

The question of area is not a suitable basis upon which to determine the agricultural worth of a county or State, and the total land area, acreage of land in farms, and improved land in farms only furnish equations with which to ascertain the proportionate value of agricultural products to the land acreage of a county. Neither is it fair to assume that the value of farm property is a suitable basis upon which to rank an agricultural county. Some counties cover a large area, and speculative land values and real estate booms may produce figures overshadowing the real agricultural worth.

An examination of the accompanying tabulation shows that 8 of the 10 leading agricultural counties exceed Lancaster County in the "total land area" and have a greater acreage of "land in farms," but this serves to emphasize the splendid productivity of the Lancaster County soil and the skill and industry of the Lancaster County farmer. Of the 10 counties 7 reported a "farm property value" larger than that for Lancaster County, which is not surprising when the greater size of the other counties is considered, or when one understands the boom and real estate speculative value of property in counties located as is Los Angeles County, Calif., which includes beautiful suburbs adjacent to the city of Los Angeles. It is manifest that no one of these three items is the proper basis for determining agricultural supremacy. It is clear that the value assigned to farm property herein is not alone because of its producing value as farm property, but because of its proximity to cities or some other similar reason, so that part of the value is foreign to agriculture, and it may be that if the true agricultural value could be accurately ascertained Lancaster County would be more nearly the leading county, if not the leading county, even on this basis.

The accompanying statistical table mentioned above provides the most complete data obtainable. It establishes beyond peradventure the official right of Lancaster County, Pa., to be hailed as the banner agricultural county in the United States and perhaps in the world.

It will be interesting to glance backward beyond the census of 1910. After the census of 1900, 20 years ago, the 12 leading counties, agriculturally speaking, according to the figures produced by the Bureau of the Census, were as follows, ranking in the order named:

Lancaster, Pa.; Chickasaw Nation, Ind. T.; McLean, Ill.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Champaign, Ill.; La Salle, Ill.; Cherokee Nation, Ind. T.; Dane, Wis.; Cass, N. Dak.; Fresno, Calif.; St. Lawrence, N. Y.; Monroe, N. Y.

According to the census of 1890, 30 years ago, the leading counties were as follows, ranking in the order named:

Lancaster, Pa.; St. Lawrence, N. Y.; Chester, Pa.; Worcester, Mass.; Bucks, Pa.; Colusa, Calif.; Middlesex, Mass.; McLean, Ill.; Oneida, N. Y.; Monroe, N. Y.

After the census of 1880, 40 years ago, the leading agricultural counties were officially announced as follows, ranking in the order named:

Lancaster, Pa.; Monroe, N. Y.; Oneida, N Y.; Montgomery, Pa.; St. Lawrence, N. Y.; Chester, Pa.; Bucks, Pa.; Erie, N. Y.; McLean, Ill.; Otsego, N. Y.

A full half century ago, in 1870, the official record discloses the following as the leading agricultural counties, ranking in the order named:

Lancaster, Pa.; St. Lawrence, N. Y.; Berks, Pa.; Oneida, N. Y.; Chester, Pa.; Jefferson, N. Y.; Bucks, Pa.; Montgomery, Pa.; Monroe, N. Y.; Chenango, N. Y.

It is interesting to note that among the dozen counties that were formidable in the race for agricultural supremacy 50 years ago Lancaster County alone has kept up the pace. All the rest have fallen by the wayside and are not in the list of leaders. Then, too, every county among the first dozen was located east of the Allegheny Mountains. Now all but Lancaster and Aroostook are located in the Middle West or on the Pacific coast. Thus do the official figures disclose that westward the course of agricultural empire has, indeed, taken its way. They also disclose that the one county that has never lost out in the race, that has constantly and consistently maintained agricultural premiership during the last half century over all the counties of the East and the West and throughout the great extent of our country is the county of Lancaster, Pa.

Her natural fertility, God given, has been enriched and maintained through generations by the skill and industry of a people devoted to the arts of agriculture and kindred callings.

The Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HALVOR STEENERSON,
OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 23, 1921.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, from our experience in the passage of this tax bill it appears that it is more difficult to accomplish a reduction of taxes than to raise them, for I notice that not only the Democrats, whose business it is to find fault with everything that the majority does, have criticized this bill but also leading Republicans in both Houses of Congress have expressed dissatisfaction with its terms. But taking it all in all, I think the bill accomplishes a great deal in the way of lightening the tax burdens of the people, and in a measure carries out the campaign pledges of the party. The first difficulty that developed among the Republicans of the House was as to the excess-profits tax. It was argued in support of the repeal of this tax that it added to the cost of living by increasing prices to the consumer; that manufacturers and dealers invariably passed on the tax to those who use the goods. This argument seemed to be sound, but when the bill was completed by the Ways and Means Committee it carried the provision that the repeal of the excess-profits tax should be retroactive to 1921. The tax is assessed for the calendar year, so that it would under this provision be retroactive to last January. It was pointed out in opposition to this that if it were true that the excess profits was added to the price of goods sold, then the consumer had already paid the tax for 10 months of 1921, and the bill proposed to donate it to those who had collected it. Manifestly, if the logic in favor of the repeal of this tax was sound, then it had already been collected for the part of the year 1921 that had expired and belonged to the Government. The question of whether the repeal should be retroactive or not was taken into a Republican conference and the retroactive provision was stricken out. I supported this action, and am glad to see that it was sustained not only when the bill came into the House but went through the Senate in that form and is now part of the bill.

The next controversy was over the surtax. The Republican leaders refused to allow a separate vote on the proposition contained in the bill to reduce the highest surtax from 65 per cent to 32 per cent, but when it went to the Senate they amended the 32 per cent and substituted 50 per cent—that is to say, in addition to the normal tax of 4 per cent, the surtax should be 1 per cent on the amount of income from $5,000 to $6,000, 2 per cent from $6,000 to $8,000, and so on, down to 50 per cent on incomes exceeding $200,000. When the bill came back to the House with this amendment an effort was made to instruct the conferees to agree to the Senate amendment, but instead of taking a direct vote the motion was tabled with the understanding that the conferees would bring back the question to the House and permit a direct vote on the proposition. This was done and a special rule was brought in from the Committee on Rules submitting the question directly, whether the 50 per cent amendment of the Senate should be agreed to. Through a combination of a minority of Republicans and the Democrats this motion was carried, and I voted for it. It was urged on the part of the Republican leaders that this reduction in the maximum surtax from 65 per cent to 50 per cent did not satisfy our platform, and they cited a letter from the President of the United States advocating a rate of 40 per cent as a compromise. I have great respect for the views of the President, but after all is said and done, I am responsible to my people for my vote and not to him. I have as good a right to say that a reduction from 65 per cent to 50 per cent is in keeping with our platform as he has that a reduction to 40 per cent is, and I am especially pledged to my constituents on this very point, for here is one of the planks in the platform upon which I was elected:

> I favor raising as much as possible of the national revenues by income and inheritance taxes on the great fortunes; in using the taxing power to keep them leveled down so they will not become a menace to the freedom of the people.

Under the Constitution all revenue bills must originate in the House of Representatives; it controls the purse strings of the Nation. Revenue bills involve taxation, and the power of taxation is the highest attribute of government, and the responsibility primarily rests upon the representatives of the people. While we are glad to listen to the views of the President, we are not controlled by them contrary to our own judgment.

I am as anxious to carry out our party pledges as anyone can be, and I believe we have done so in this instance. We have reduced the maximum surtaxes from 65 per cent to 50 per cent, and, mind you, that applies only to the amount of incomes over $200,000. The man with the income that exceeds $6,000, but does not exceed $8,000, pays only 2 per cent, and the man whose income is $22,000, but does not exceed $24,000, pays 10 per cent, and so on to the maximum. The whole theory of the income tax, including surtaxes, is that the tax should be placed on the shoulders best able to bear them, and this is faithfully carried out in the schedule of this bill. The principal argument against this high surtax was that it was impossible to collect so high a rate. The answer to this is that it has been collected heretofore, and what has been done can be done again. Another argument was that high surtaxes on large incomes would drive money into tax-free securities instead of encouraging productive investments. The tax-free securities consist of municipal bonds issued for public improvements, such as road building, schoolhouses, and the like, and somebody has got to invest in these securities if industry and progress are to proceed. There is no evidence that these tax-free securities are especially favored by those with a large income. Mr. MONDELL, in the debate on the bill, among other things, said:

> Men will not invest their money in new industries greatly needed, take all the chances of loss and pay in taxes half or more of all the gains, but will invest in tax-free securities not only of the States, counties, and municipalities, but of the Government. Five billion dollars of Victory notes are tax free. Are men to be criticized because they put their money in them at a time when the Treasury was begging for investment in Victory notes to meet the awful cost of war? We have just sold $100,000,000 worth of Federal farm loan bonds based on farms in the great Central West. Are men to be criticized because they invested in those farm loan tax-free bonds or shall invest in like bonds in the future?

It is true that there was recently sold $100,000,000 of Federal farm loan bonds, but not one-twentieth part of the demand for farm loans can be satisfied. There ought to be issued at least $2,000,000,000 of farm loan bonds if the demands of the farmers for credit facilities are to be satisfied. If these high surtaxes upon large incomes will induce rich men to invest in farm loan bonds, which are tax free, it will be a godsend to the country. This point which was made in opposition to high surtax rates upon large incomes is really the strongest point made in its favor. That the farmers appreciate this is proven by the following letter:

> WASHINGTON, D. C., November 25, 1921.
> HON. HALVOR STEENERSON,
> House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
> DEAR SIR: The American Farm Bureau Federation wishes to express the appreciation of farmers for your support of the 50 per cent surtax provision of the tax bill.
> Our farmers are confident that their representatives realize the importance of considering these questions from the farmers' viewpoint and that by united action they can greatly hasten the return of a more happy situation in the farm communities and thereby restore national prosperity more quickly.
> Assuring you of our continued best wishes, I am,
> Very truly, yours,
> AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
> GRAY SILVER,
> Washington Representative.

There are several other features of the bill that should command public favor, especially among the farmers, as, for instance, the repeal of the tax on transportation, to take effect January 1 next. This tax burden fell most heavily on the people of the interior. The people of Minnesota, in my district, for instance, have to send their farm products to the market on the Atlantic seaboard, and with the 3 per cent tax on freight rates it reduces the price of wheat at least a cent and a half per bushel. The people in the Middle West necessarily have to travel more than those who live on the seaboard, and the 8 per cent tax on passenger and Pullman fares amounts to a great deal. The transportation of coal cost from Pennsylvania to my district amounts to at least $10 a ton, so that a man who uses

10 tons of coal pays $3 in this tax alone. I have made computations based upon the operating incomes of the railroads, and I am satisfied that the repeal of this transportation tax will reduce the burden of the people of the ninth congressional district of Minnesota approximately $1,000,000 a year.

Estimated reduction in taxes as compared with present law for calendar year 1922.

The repeal of transportation taxes, including parcel post and express, saves the taxpayers $290,000,000. We saved the heads of families a $20,000,000 tax on insurance policies and $8,000,000 on candy, $12,000,000 on musical instruments, besides more than $10,000,000 on electric fans and furs; $2,000,000 on toilet soaps and $6,000,000 on perfumery and proprietary medicines.

These miscellaneous items are really consumption taxes and fall most heavily on those of small means. In the nature of things revenue laws must be frequently revised in order to adjust them to the needs of the Government, and no doubt this will be necessary. Readjusted compensation to our veterans of the World War will have to be provided for in the very near future, but it is to be hoped that as a result of the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments enough will be saved out of the military and naval appropriations to more than cover this item.

In contrast with the propaganda denouncing the proposed tax revision bill, which has appeared in the metropolitan press, and has been repeated by special correspondents in Washington in the dispatches to their papers, is a recent editorial in the Washington Post. This is based upon official figures and is a fair statement of the case, and I print it in full below:

LOWER TAXES.

The compilation published in the Post, obtained from official sources and showing the effects of the new revenue bill, is worthy of careful scrutiny, because it not only gives a very comprehensive idea of the amount of tax which will be collected next year on incomes for 1921, but it refutes the oft-repeated charge that tax revision has brought relief only to the rich and not to the poor. The latter allegation, frequently made in Congress, is based upon the fact that the new bill does not reduce the normal income tax, but it does cut the maximum surtax down from 65 per cent to 50 per cent. It fails, however, to take into account the increase from $2,000 to $2,500 in the exemption allowed to heads of families or the increase from $200 to $400 exemption allowed for each dependent.

The head of a family earning up to $2,500 will, under the new law, pay no income tax whatever. Assuming that he has no dependents, if he earns $3,000 a year, he will pay a total tax of $20, as against $40 under the old law. Since $3,000 represents approximately the average earnings of probably the largest class of citizens under existing conditions, it will be seen that millions will receive a reduction of 50 per cent in their income tax. These as a rule are people to whom $20 is a very considerable item, much greater, in fact, than several times that amount would be to those of larger incomes. On $4,000 earnings the tax will be $60 instead of $80 under the former law, and on $5,000 it will be $100, as against $120. The levy increases at this ratio up to incomes of $20,000, which will now pay $1,720 in tax instead of $1,990.

Increasing the exemption for heads of families from $2,000 to $2,500 applies only to those with total incomes of $5,000 or less, but the actuaries of the Treasury Department estimate that more than 2,000,000 taxpayers in the country will benefit by this provision. Doubling the exemption for dependents—from $200 to $400 each—it is estimated will affect about 2,750,000 taxpayers. These facts show how utterly groundless are the loose assertions that the amendments made by Congress to the existing income-tax levies are in the interest of those of great wealth and not to the benefit of wage earners. Proportionately the latter receive more relief than the former, but it was the evident purpose of Congress to lift the tax burdens of all as much as practicable under the circumstances without reducing the Treasury revenues beyond the point of safety.

Another point that is not generally understood throughout the country, judging from inquiries reaching Washington, is that the reductions in income tax take effect immediately, or rather they are retroactive, since they apply to earnings during the calendar year 1921, while the elimination of the excess-profits tax and the reduction in the corporation tax are effective January 1, 1922, and collections under them will not begin until 1923.

The new tax bill is, indeed, as some leaders of Congress have frankly stated, a temporary measure, designed to secure the revenue required by the Government and to get it with a minimum of oppression, and the public should regard it as such. The measure of relief given the average citizen under its provisions is generous and welcome, but it is to be hoped that in the near future a revision of the law will be possible under which tax levies may be still further reduced.

Are Not American Mothers and Their Newborn Babes More Worthy of Consideration by the Federal Government than the Hogs, Horses, Cattle, and Sheep?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. ROBSION,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 19, 1921.

On the bill (S. 1039) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, we have before us for the consideration of the House what is known as the maternity bill and sometimes called the Sheppard-Towner bill. This bill proposes the authorization of Federal aid to the States for the public protection of the mothers and the newborn babes of America. Some people are violently opposing this legislation. They claim that it is unconstitutional, socialistic, and paternalistic. We do not share in these views. We are giving this measure our unqualified support. Our only serious objection is we do not think the appropriation is large enough. This legislation has been championed by the mothers of America, the welfare associations, educational associations, and by practically all of the women's clubs and organizations of America. To those who contend that this measure is unconstitutional, socialistic, and paternalistic we wish to call their attention to many acts of Congress involving the same principle. In 1911 Congress appropriated money to be used in cooperation with the States for protection against fire of the forested watersheds. On March 4, 1911, Congress authorized the Secretary of the Navy to furnish a suitable naval vessel, with charts, books, and instruments to cooperate with the States in promoting nautical education.

By the act of May 8, 1914, Congress provided for Federal aid to cooperate with the States in agriculture-extension work. The Federal Government has been helping the States to eradicate and prevent diseases among the horses, hogs, cattle, sheep, goats, and poultry of the country, and has spent large sums of money in cooperation with the States in producing pure-bred stock and poultry. Likewise the Government has spent large sums of money in cooperation with the States in promoting home economics and sanitation. Recently Congress passed a law providing a large sum of money to be used in cooperation with the States in vocational education in agriculture, the trades, industries, and in the preparation of teachers for teaching these subjects, and also for the rehabilitation of persons crippled in industry, and the Federal Government has spent and will spend hundreds of millions of dollars in vocational education and rehabilitation of its soldiers.

The Federal Government has appropriated something like $400,000,000 to be used in cooperation with the States in the construction of good roads, and we could cite other instances wherein the Federal Government has contributed or appropriated money to aid the States along certain lines of activities. If Congress can appropriate money to aid and encourage the States to produce better hogs, cattle, sheep, horses, and poultry, and to prevent and check disease among them, and can help to eradicate the boll weevil, army worm, chinch bug, and the insects and diseases of other crops and the fruit producing plants and trees of the country, why has not Congress the power to cooperate with the States in producing better health and less loss of life among the mothers and newborn babes of America? Statistics show that more mothers die of childbirth and more newborn babes die in America according to the population than in any other civilized country of the world. This bill proposes to encourage and help the States in giving such knowledge, information, and help to the mothers of America as will greatly lessen the number of deaths of mothers in childbirth and newborn babes and cause the mothers and children of America to be stronger and more vigorous. Who should receive higher consideration from the Federal Government than the mothers and newborn babes of America? I am glad to have an opportunity to say that the mothers and the newborn babes of this country are much more worthy of consideration from our Government than the hogs, the cattle, the horses, the poultry, the cotton, corn, wheat, and the fruit trees and plants of the country, and of more importance than the roads of the country—I have favored all of these—and I am glad of an opportunity to give my support and vote in behalf of the mothers and the newborn babes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS D. SCHALL,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 23, 1921.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, it is distressing to hear the friends of wealth heating themselves in vain passion in their endeavor to prove that raising the per cent of tax will cause a decrease in revenue. They quote figures showing the extent of shrinkage, which reveal two things. First, the real depth of patriotism of the men of wealth, who gained most from the war and are now unwilling to shoulder their share of its burdens, and second, that something is rotten in the State of Denmark in the enforcement of our laws, that tax dodging can be so extensively indulged in. If they would dodge 50 per cent, it is perfectly ridiculous on the face of it to assert that they would not dodge 32 per cent.

During the war, however much the income tax irked, they were compelled to fall into step with the march of patriotism. But the minute the compulsion of war laws is relaxed, which they were first in advocating in order to insure the necessary man power to protect their wealth and the Government under which they were able to amass it, they drop their cloak of patriotism, revealing their arms full of tax-exempt securities. These taxes were placed upon the statute books during the stress of war, and they should not be removed, at least until the exigency of that war is passed.

Some object that they do not mind paying legitimate war bills, but do object to the payment of the bills heaped up by the war profiteers under the Democratic administration. But, as I remember, there was a great scampering of feet when Republican investigating committees neared the holders of those war profits, and it was hard to tell which way to shoot, lest embarrassing casualties occur. Partisanship was not so "party"cular when it came to scooping in the ducats. Loot was loot, whether it was Republican or Democratic.

Seldom have we been treated to such a frank analysis of the human nature of the big business individual. They have admitted openly more than the men they designate as demagogues have charged them with. They have stated that they will evade the tax which the United States Government sees fit to place upon them; that they will refuse to invest their great wealth, because it will be subject to a tax they do not like to pay. Nobody pays a tax because he likes it. It is not a bit more palatable to the little fellow to dole out of his small pile the tangible tax, for which it is hard to visualize the actual return. But liking or not liking is not argument, and it is not argument that the war is over. The war debt is not over, and it is up to the men who are able to pay for the protection their money and their business have had in this war in proportion to the amount of the income and quit squealing. It is just as pro-German to squeal now as it was during the war, and this is the same bunch that are opposed to the soldiers' bonus, and due to their influence the House bill sleeps quietly in the Senate.

Men do not understand the temper of the country when they make statements about the injustice of "soaking the rich," as they call this legitimate demand that the rich pay their share. Money can not go out and fight. You have got to have men.

Two men, one worth a billion dollars and the other nothing, are equal in force and in service to their country on the front against the enemy. They risk alike as to their lives, but the man who has a billion has had the protection of that billion, and he should pay a just tax in proportion.

He draws for the protection of his property against the combined efforts of the entire Army and Navy, and in proportion to such protection it is just that he pay.

The great mass of people, the laborers of this country, in shop and farm, lay out their little store of money, and when the kids' shoes have been paid for and the meat, what there is of it, and the scanty food, and the rent, or the necessary farm equipment, and a 2-cent stamp tax on this and that—and everything still at war prices but the farmers' product, which these same financial kings, through their bank control have arbitrarily deflated—there is mighty little left. They will laugh, and it will not be a pleasant laugh to hear, when they understand that after this tax is paid these same financial kings grumble that they will get only half of all income over $200,000 a year. It will seem to them, as it must to any normal man, that a person could make shift to worry along on that until the war debts are paid.

And, Mr. Speaker, I hope I will not be considered entirely unregenerate when I vote with the Democrats, because I will have no other opportunity to represent the opinion of my district upon this question unless I do so vote, to recommit this bill, and thereby insist on taking 25 per cent over $10,000,000 left to the rich man's heir, even though these pampered sons, who if they were forced to rely upon their actual ability could not earn a living, look upon their inherited incomes as a divine right and resent as arrogantly as the kings of old any attempt on the part of the people to levy upon them for the common defense.

Their rugged dads, who had the brains and intelligence to organize and shape the machinery which creates this vast wealth for them, who by touching life understood it, would have scorned to advance their whimpering arguments.

I have always voted, and I intend to continue to vote to the best of my ability as God gives me the light to see it, to represent the opinion of my district. No man, combination, group, or clique of men have through the usurpation and attachment of a party name any right to influence that judgment. Lincoln, on this very floor, by the same class of interests was called a demagogue. Many times during the last seven years I have heard this same noun applied to those men, both Democrat and Republican, who have dared stand here upon the floor and advocate the interest of their country above that of party. I have heard, more often under breath, but sometimes openly, Members of this House slurringly refer to fellow Members, who have been honestly doing their duty as they saw it, as common-people men. I want to say that I am a common-people man, and I am proud of it.

My dad was a Republican and voted for and fought under Abraham Lincoln, and I am a Lincoln Republican. The plain people of my district, in the face of both Democratic and Republican organized opposition, sent me to Congress, and they have thrice reelected me by overwhelming majorities. And I owe allegiance only to the people of my district, whose opinion I believe I am correctly representing in my vote on this bill.
